Secretary Hull And Peek Split On Trade Drive

State Executive Holds to Favored-Nation Policy as Best.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Sharp conflict over methods to be pursued in reopening the clogged channels of international commerce has developed, it became apparent yesterday, between Secretary of State Cordell Hull and George N. Peek, foreign trade adviser to President Roosevelt.

For some time it has been known that the President's right and left bowers in the drive to stimulate foreign trade did not see eye to eye. The cleavage, however, has now become more pronounced. With each of the men projecting his views in public speeches, a change of policy or other repercussions may follow.

While Secretary Hull has insisted that the reciprocal trade agreements which his department is now negotiating with a dozen or more nations must be on the basis of most-favored-nation treatment, Mr. Peck has urged proceeding along the line of selective imports and exports, which he asserts "may involve a change of the unconditional most-favored-nation policy," as well as the adoption of a "two-column tariff" and import quotas on certain products from certain countries.

Mr. Peek's viewpoint was forcefully presented in a speech Tuesday before the Association of Land Grant Colleges, which went unnoticed until yesterday. Due to the tenor of the speech a reference by Mr. Peek to "a school of international altruists which still believes in free trade" was regarded in some quarters as directed to Secretary Hull, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and those working with these two Cabinet officers.

Slow Progress in Pacts.

Meanwhile progress in the negotiations of the reciprocal trade pacts has been slow, due in large part to the necessity of settling subsidiary and collateral questions growing out of such commercial arrangements. It was explained yesterday, however, that completion of trade agreements with Brazil and Colombia may be expected before the year ends. So far the agreement with Cuba is the only understanding completed.

Both Secretary Hull and Mr. Peek believe that foreign trade can and should be increased and they agree that if this country wishes to sell more abroad it must buy more. But they differ on how to achieve the end they have in view.

Mr. Peek leans toward "a two-price system for some commodities—one for domestic consumption and another for foreign markets." Whereas Secretary Hull deplores the erection of high tariff walls, quota systems and exclusive reciprocal agreements, Mr. Peek appears to lament that "the United States has failed to keep up with the procession." His attitude toward the success of the efforts to negotiate

DONALD R. RICHBERG.

'Future' NRA Mapped Out By Richberg

Head of Executive Council Upholds Section 7-A in Discussing Set-up.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—A six-point program of essentials for permanent NRA legislation, including a new conception of the anti-trust laws, was advanced tonight by Donald R. Richberg, director of President Roosevelt's Executive Council.

Richberg, in an address here, also pointed toward strong administration opposition to organized labor's demands for a national 30-hour week. His statements were considered of unusual significance, despite repeated assertions that he expressed only his own views which "may not be generally acceptable."

For Fixing of Wages.

Although Richberg did not segregate his six points pertaining to a permanent NRA, he did, in an address before the Associated Grocery manufacturers, which also was broadcast, lay stress on the following:

1. Preservation of the "flexibility of code making" both as to commercial practices and labor conditions.

2. "I believe there is a demonstrable soundness in the xing of minimum wages and maximum hours for each trade and industry."

3. "Admittedly, dishonest business practices should be proscribed."

4. "Exact reports of production, prices, wages, employment and such fundamental knowledge of economic conditions * * * is necessary for economic security in an industrial civilization."

Takes Up Antitrust Laws.

5. "We must change one misconception of the antitrust laws. * * * They were not intended as restraints upon agreements to compete fairly * * *. It seems to me reasonable to provide that all trade associations should do business openly and furnish full information concerning their activities to a body which might combine some of the functions and authorities of the administration of NRA and the Federal Trade Commission.

6. "I am profoundly convinced that as originally written and presented to the Congress, it (Section 7-a), guaranteeing labor's collective bargaining rights) expressed clearly a sound principle for the maintenance of satisfactory labor relations."

Considerable interest attached to Richberg's suggestion for a changed conception of the antitrust laws. He said:

"Certain activities could be legalized by statute and others forbidden, with provision that in the twilight zone of interpretation a National Code Administration would be empowered to authorize or prohibit concerted action. Its decisions

Job Ouster Faces Fight In Congress

Legislators Are Ready to Remedy 'Firing' of 900 U.S. Aids.

Many Admit 'Error' in Supporting 'Rider' of McKellar.

By James D. Secrest.

Remedial action intended to restore the jobs of 900 Treasury employes scheduled for dismissal December 1, is anticipated at the approaching session of Congress in view of the controversy that has arisen over the McKellar "patronage rider," it developed yesterday.

The Civil Service Commission has received many letters from members of Congress, similar to an inquiry from Representative Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, indicating that they were under a misapprehension when they voted for the rider, and now want the ill remedied by whatever means is necessary.

The "rider," which was passed in the closing days of Congress, was intended to displace "Hoover Republicans" but actually struck at qualified Civil Service employes who had previously passed regular tests of their ability and training.

Examination Defended.

Leonard D. White, a member of the Civil Service Commission, yesterday entered the controversy that has developed since Comptroller General McCarl upheld the statute last week. He issued a formal statement defending the type of examination given the former prohibition agents and other employes of the alcohol tax unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Previously, Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, another member of the commission, had explained, in answer to Mrs. Norton's query, that the commission's hands were tied by the McKellar "rider" and subsequent interpretations and had no choice but to hold the examination which 900 failed to pass or refused to take.

Explaining that the examination given the investigators consisted of a general intelligence test and an observation test, Mr. White said:

"I. Q." Test Is Upheld.

"The general intelligence test was introduced in the American Army during the World War and has been continued in a modified form. The United States Civil Service Commission has been using the general intelligence test for various kinds of work for over ten years with the best of results.

"It is also used by progressive examining boards in all parts of the country. Colleges, universities, and high schools have also accepted this type of mental test.

"For the past 15 years I have studied the examination methods of Civil Service Commissions, Federal, State and local. In my judgment the general intelligence test is one of the best methods of securing highly qualified Government employes.

"This is especially true when the test is supplemented, for specialized positions, by a definite experience requirement as a condition of entrance to the examination, as was

Lake Boat Sinks; Four of Crew Lost

Two Freighters in Collision in Fog; Fifteen Saved.

Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 21 (AP).—Fog, menace of mariners everywhere, trapped the freighters W. C. Franz and Edward C. Loomis into a collision on Lake Huron today, sending the Franz to the bottom with four of her 19-man crew.

The survivors of the Franz were picked up by the Loomis, which steamed southward under her own power with a stove-in bow, but apparently no damage below the water line. There was no indication where she would dock.

Apparently the Franz sank rapidly, for within a few minutes after Austin E. Reesor, wireless operator on the doomed freighter sent out a "calling all" signal with word of the collision at 3:27 a. m., he told of the crew taking to the lifeboats. Then all was silent.

Gloria Is Ruled Ward of Court

Heiress Stays With Aunt 5 Days, With Mother Over Week-ends.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Gloria Vanderbilt, 10-year-old heiress, must live with her paternal aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, five days a week, and with her mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, Saturdays and Sundays, Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew ruled today. She will be the ward of the court.

Justice Carew stated that the little girl was "hereby judged to be the ward of the Supreme Court of the State of New York," and Mrs. Whitney "is granted the custody of said infant as the representative of" the court.

The court ordered that the child be delivered to her mother at 10 a. m. each Saturday and returned to Mrs. Whitney at sundown on Sundays, that she spend Christmas with her mother and that she spend the months of July and August with Mrs. Vanderbilt up to the beginning of the school term at Roslyn, Long Island, "unless cause shall be shown to the contrary."

In his findings, Justice Carew said that "the life lived by the infant since June, 1932, has been fit, suitable and appropriate and has resulted in a great improvement in the infant physically and mentally, and has tended to promote its best welfare, comfort and happiness."

During this period she has been in the custody of Mrs. Whitney,

Chest $104,800 Short of Goal As Its Campaign Comes to End

The final result of the Community Chest drive was $1,570,199.62. This was 93.74 per cent of the goal or $104,800.38 short of the quota of $1,675,000.

Chest officials expect that from $50,000 to $75,000 will be added during the postcampaign period from the contributions of persons out of the city at present or those who have delayed in giving.

Although it has been decided that there will be no extension of the drive, H. L. Rust, jr., campaign chairman, last night asked workers to "clean up" as far as possible the assignments which they were not able to reach during the drive.

The final figures were announced at the meeting last night at the Willard Hotel, where more than 1,000 of the 6,000 volunteer Chest workers gathered to hear the grand total of the drive.

Two of the Chest's five solicitation units passed their quota. The Governmental unit, which had the largest quota, went 6 per cent over it. The Capital unit, with the smallest quota, exceeded it by 144 per cent.

The meeting, which was followed by a buffet supper, was in the nature of a last rally by the workers, who, while not entirely successful, secured gifts from 1,000 more citizens than ever subscribed to a previous drive. There were 147,704 givers.

Commissioner George E. Allen deemed the Chest drive a success. "What would we have done if you

Prince Fidgets in Fog, Awaiting Arrival of His Fiancee.

London, Nov. 21 (AP).—Princess Marina—chic and lovely in fur coat, beige ensemble and flat little sailor hat—came to London today, her trousseau shopping done, to be kissed by both her parents-in-law-to-be.

Capacity crowds braved wet, foggy weather, the thickest England has had this season, to cheer the future Duchess of Kent both at the railway station and at Buckingham place.

A salvo of lusty cheers greeted Marina as she arrived. Uninterrupted applause that followed for half an hour finally led Marina and her fiance, the Duke of Kent, to appear on the balcony of the upper floor for an ovation lasting three minutes.

Station Befogged.

The fog almost blacked out the scene at the station as Marina arrived from Paris, where she completed her prenuptial shopping yesterday, officially to usher in the wedding season.

Despite the battery of two dozen floodlamps overhead, the fog was so thick the features of persons standing 30 feet away, across the red plush carpet stretched before the royal waiting room, could not be distinguished.

The handsome young Duke of Kent, whose delay in getting away to Dover to meet his fiancee after her Channel crossing caused the train to be held two minutes, gave adequate proof that royal blood is no bar to prematrimonial nervousness.

The Duke Fidgets.

As King George, Queen Mary, the Prince of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of York greeted Marina, the duke fidgeted nervously, fingering his silk hat, which he carried in his hand most of the day.

All the hurry, the flurry and the excitement in connection with the royal wedding will be aired in the House of Commons tomorrow if J. McGovern, Glasgow member, has his say.

McGovern was the fellow who rose up in his place and startled

Another Year's Extension Due On RFC's Life

Legislation to This Effect Is Decided Upon by Roosevelt Board.

(Associated Press.)

The RFC's authority to strengthen the weak spots of the Nation's credit structure with millions of dollars in loans will be extended another year at the coming session of Congress.

Under present laws its lending life would end on January 31, but one of the first pieces of Administration legislation to be submitted to Congress is to be a bill postponing the expiration date until, probably, January 31, 1936.

The numerous governmental lending agencies now are being subjected to a review by a specially appointed Presidential committee to see if some of them may not be merged or liquidated. On one thing, however, the committee already is in general agreement, that the RFC may not yet be dispensed with.

Still Has Ample Funds.

It is amply supplied with money, so well provided for in fact that Chairman Jesse Jones has said no new appropriations will be needed to carry it through the additional year. The corporation has $2,123,000,000 in unexpended funds and repayments on old loans are pouring in at a rate of $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 a day.

One reason why officials are anxious that the corporation be con-

Britain Asks U. S. to Save Navy Parley

Chief developments yesterday in the international agitation over disarmament were:

Great Britain acted to arrange new conversations on arms limitation with the United States in the face of unshaken Japanese demands for naval equality.

France's minister for air, citing gains in German aviation, asked for $230,000,000 to put French military air forces to the front.

The State Department here expressed itself satisfied with the reception of the proposal at Geneva for world-wide control of arms.

Former Premier Saito of Japan won applause from diplomats and Capitol Hill for his blunt attack on the jingo Big Navy bloc of his own country.

London, Nov. 21 (AP).—Great Britain, facing Japan's stubborn stand for full naval equality, today asked the United States for another conference to see what can be done to save the principle of naval limitation from the scrapheap.

Soft-spoken Tsuneo Matsudaira, Tokyo's Ambassador in London and Japanese delegate to tri-power naval conversations here, told Sir John Simon, British foreign minister, again that Japan declines flatly to modify her original demand for

Henderson Castle's Treasures for Auction

Furnishings of Famous Castle to Be Auctioned in January in Liquidating an Estate Once Valued at $30,000,000.

All furnishings of Henderson Castle, from whose brownstone turrets Mrs. John B. Henderson ruled Capital society until her death in 1931, will be sold at auction in January, The Post learned yesterday.

The sale will be made as part of attempts by attorneys for the heirs to liquidate an estate once valued at more than $30,000,000.

Every table, chair, piece of glassware and china, every painting will go to the highset bidder as soon as the auctioneers, Adam Weschler & Son, with the assistance of Frances Arnold and Mrs. Henry N. Arnold, of New York, who represent the principal heirs, can catalogue them and arrange their display in the Castle that has dominated the hill at Sixteenth street and Florida avenue since 1888.

Miss Arnold and Mrs. Arnold were at work yesterday in the Castle, which has been closed for more than four years.

Art collectors and buyers for galleries will be interested in a collection of paintings which literally covers brocaded walls in most of the downstairs rooms. Many of these are said to represent the finest work of the French school of painters and to have been one of the finest private collections of its kind in the Nation.

Antiquarians will find numerous examples of the heavy, richly carved furniture typical of Victorian times and scores of pieces representing other eras. The glassware, china and silver that made the Henderson table famous will

Parole Unit 'Showdown' Is Ordered

Allen Calls Members of Board to Parley With D. C. Heads.

Board Defends Actions; Donovan's Release Held Justified.

Authority and functioning of the District Parole Board are to be the subject of a conference between board members and the District Commissioners, probably tomorrow, Commissioner George E. Allen announced yesterday.

Announcement of his purpose to ask the parole board members to confer with the Commissioners was made by Mr. Allen after he had received a letter signed by Wilbur La Roe, jr., and Dr. J. Emmett Scott, parole board members. A footnote said that while William W. Bride, chairman, still was very ill "we are confident that this letter expresses his views."

Board Upholds Actions.

The board "feels it must insist upon its complete independence of judgment," the letter said, adding that even hostile publicity about its work "is a healthy thing."

Defense of its parole of James (Buzz) Donovan comprises the principal part of the report to the Commissioner. The report, however, was not accompanied by any of the board records in the case. Commissioner Allen refused to comment on that aspect of the situation beyond his statement that the parole board members were to be invited to confer with the Commissioners.

"We want to know just what are the rights of the Commissioners and their relationship to the parole board," he said.

Long Conference Held.

The Allen announcement was made following a lengthy conference with Lieut. Col. Daniel I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, and Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

Much has been made of the release by the board of prisoners with lengthy criminal records and it was understood the police superintendent brought to the conference a list of names of paroled prisoners the police believe should not have been released. The list was not a lengthy one, it was intimated, but it is said to have included the names of some of those known or suspected by police to be engaged in the gambling or other rackets.

Defends Its Actions.

The board's statement of its position and policy begins with an expression of its "desire to cooperate with other law enforcement agencies to the end that criminals may be adequately punished and the community adequately protected."

A complete denial that "professional, hardened and desperate criminals" are released follows. "Of the 183 prisoners paroled by the present board, not one has committed any crime involving any injury to any person, any gangster activities or any other crimes of that type after his release," it was stated.

The statement then outlines the two schools of thought regarding parole of prisoners, classifying one as desiring every prisoner to stay in prison for the maximum term, and the other as seeking to coddle prisoners. The board, says the

Children Endangered As N. Y. Man Is Slain

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—While scores of children passed, a man stepped from an automobile in the uptown district today and fired five times at Horace Malone, 34, foreman of a liquor delivery company. All the shots took effect. Malone collapsed and died on the steps of the Paulist Fathers' Church.

Children and nuns from the nearby parochial school were in the line of fire. The nuns had just led 100 pupils from the school. John A. Lanze, 35, owner of the delivery company, was arrested in connection with the shooting. Police said they were informed the company had had labor troubles.

3 Babies Found Dead in Trunk; Woman Arrested in New York

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Discovery of the decomposed bodies of three infants in a trunk today led to arraignment of attractive, well-groomed Ruby Clarke, 36, of Upper Nyack, N. Y., on a charge of homicide—a charge she denied.

The dust-covered trunk, its lock broken open, was opened by two workmen, who were startled at their unexpected find. It had lain in the Brooklyn warehouse since it was checked by Miss Clarke in July, 1932.

"To our information and belief Miss Clarke, residing at 1000 President street, Brooklyn, caused the death of three infants by suffocation"—said a short affidavit signed by two detectives when she was arraigned. She had resided on President street when the trunk was checked.

But District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan, apparently disagreeing with the detectives, indicated she may be released. He said:

"If nothing more develops than what I have before me now her release should be ordered."

Miss Clarke was held without bail for a hearing next Friday in Brooklyn Homicide Court after she was questioned in the Manhattan police line-up.

10 Arrested; 3 Presses and $70,000 Seized Near Newark.

Notes Distributed Over Wide Area

Number Found in D. C.; Suspects' Arraignment Set for Today.

The gang behind one of the biggest floods of counterfeit money that has ever streamed over the United States was caught yesterday, the United States Secret Service announced here.

Two men and a woman in Tenafly, N. J., another man in Newark, one in Brooklyn, and five in Manhattan were netted in the haul, after Federal and local authorities had been spotting them for six weeks and more.

Seventy thousand dollars in newly made notes and the three printing presses on which they were printed were said to have been seized in the tiny house at Tenafly, near Newark, which was described as the group's headquarters.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars were manufactured by the gang, according to Federal officials. The notes were sold to professional "passers," who spent them in important cities all over the United States. Some notes, about $300 to $400 all told, were passed in Washington, where they deceived bank tellers, who forwarded them along to the Treasury, which confiscated them and billed the banks for their value.

Skillful Forgery.

United States and Federal Reserve notes, in denominations of $5, $10, $20 and $100 were so skillfully forged that private citizens accepted them without hesitation. The only things wrong were the paper, which was not the Government type, and the etching, which technicians found was done on copper plates, instead of on steel plates as in the Federal plant.

Sentences running up to thousands of years await a conviction, Secret Service officials grimly declared. For each note confiscated and each plate seized, a separate count can be imposed, with a maximum sentence of 15 years in each case, the officials explained, and added that they intended to get the maximum penalty.

It will go down as one of the memorable deeds of the Treasury unit, Joseph E. Murphy, assistant chief of the Secret Service, asserted.

Twenty extra men were thrown into the New York-New Jersey region within the last few days, he disclosed, commanded by Robert L. Goddy, head of the Syracuse office. New York City police lent Lieut. Charles Newman and Detectives Kennedy and De Rosa of the bomb squad to assist. New Jersey State troopers also cooperated.

"Passed" in Wide Area.

"Passers" all over the United States have been arrested with notes from the gang's presses in their possession. In a typical case, two men were arrested November 4 in Waverley, Tenn., with 73 of the $5 notes in their possession. But, Chief Murphy explained, "passers" almost never know the makers of the notes they buy. They get the bills through underworld distributors. With notes as excellently made as these, the price ran up to 20 and 30 cents on the dollar, or $30 for each fraudulent $100 bill.

Most of the notes in this case were passed in night clubs. The latest to fall into the hands of the Secret Service was a $100 bill turned in by a man in evening clothes in one of New York's exclusive clubs in payment of a $14 check.

Cities as widely scattered as Boston, Providence, New York, New-

Long Kingdom Again Refused Federal Funds

$4,000,000 PWA Loan for Housing Work in New Orleans Denied.

The Federal Government struck again yesterday at Huey (Kingfish) Long's Louisiana "Empire," when the Public Works Administration canceled a $4,000,000 low-cost housing project slated for New Orleans, it was learned last night.

In another of a series of moves against Senator Long and his attempted "dictatorship," the Public Works Board voted not to go through with a slum-clearance project for the Louisiana city, after plans had been drawn and a preliminary survey made.

Action was surrounded with the utmost secrecy. No specific reason was given for the decision, but it was learned the board is prepared to justify its action on broad and sufficient grounds.

Coming within a week of a decision to hold up a $2,500,000 PWA advance to the New Orleans Sewerage and Water Board, after the "Kingfish" seized control of the unit, yesterday's action apparently confirmed a definite Administration policy.

Ever since Senator Long broke with the Senate Democratic leadership and assailed phases of the New Deal program, it has been impossible for him to obtain any Federal patronage. A number of appointments explicitly hostile to the Long regime have been made in Louisiana. PWA attaches, however, insist that the present controversy has no possible relation to the Administration's attitude on patronage.

No low-cost housing program for New Orleans ever had been formally announced by the board, in accord with its plan to forestall a set-up in real estate values by suppressing premature publicity.

It was learned, however, that the $4,000,000 program had been worked out in detail and was to have been announced shortly. But yesterday's move signed its death warrant.

Congress Plans Forum to Pare Talk on Floor

Seek to Allow Newcomers to Air Views Without Slowing Sessions.

By Robert C. Albright.

A practical plan for piping excess oratorical steam and supercharged atmosphere out of the next House chamber is being quietly evolved on Capitol Hill by an influential group of conservative Democratic regulars.

Concerned at the prospect of untamed new members and enthusiastic old liners stretching the bounds of parliamentary procedure, this group of veterans is planning a "safety valve" that can pop-off harmlessly when an emergency arises.

In a nutshell, the conservatives propose a "congressional forum," informal in nature, and entirely apart from the regular sessions of the House, where pent-up members can air their views in freedom, with no reporters present.

No Trouble Expected.

Not that the regulars expect a mob of uncurried wild men to descend on the Capitol January 3. They insist the next Congress is not going to be half so radical as the country has reason to expect, that it may in fact be a model of harmony, complacently echoing every slight wish of the President.

But they are taking no chances. Any way, they say, the idea is not a new one. It was tried out successfully at the close of the Hoover Administration, with Representative Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the moving force. Last session, again, the forum was unobtrusively organized, and 100 members signed up.

They argue the next House still is an uncertain quantity, and it can't possibly do any harm to revamp the forum along lines that should make for thorough consideration of measures that otherwise would not fully be thrashed out on the floor.

Value of Forum.

A member's political beliefs do not always jibe with the way he votes, according to some of these old-timers. Often a representative does a lot of talking in private before he finally votes in accordance with the Administration's leadership. Backstage talk gives him a chance to square himself with his conscience, and he feels better about it.

Proponents of the forum plan also point out there is no other way to get at a frank expression of Congressional opinion. Time is limited in regular House sessions, and members are tempted to "play to the galleries" with long oratorical flourishes. With the publicity ban on the forum, there is no incentive for gestures.

The informal sessions will be bipartisan; Republicans and Democrats alike may attend. Currency problems, the bonus, farm issues, economic conditions and questions of New Deal administration all are scheduled for airing.

Extension Due On Life of RFC

available to prospective borrowers, but that they had not asked for the loans.

Both President Roosevelt and Jones were speakers at the convention. The President said that as quickly as the banks began supplying credit in volume, just so quickly would Government lending be abridged. Jones, however, told the bankers bluntly that unless they lent to industry, the Government would.

Authorized Huge Loans.

Since its creation, the corporation has authorized loans totaling $8,415,000,000, which have tided over hundreds of banks, building and loan associations, railroads, farm mortgage companies, insurance companies and other financial institutions. It has advanced $706,000,000 to other Government agencies and $1,216,000,000 to the States for relief.

Of the aggregate authorizations, $724,000,000 has been canceled and $1,216,000,000 not called for. This money is available to the borrowers and to banks whose capital structure may need strengthening by the purchase of preferred stock and capital notes, a procedure by which the RFC has made strong going concerns of many previously weak banks.

The relief outlay includes $299,000,000 lent directly to the States and $409,000,000 advanced to the States upon the certification of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and $215,000,000 directly to the FERA under provisions of a law enacted late in the last session, making a total of $500,000,000 in RFC funds available for relief.

$2,251,000,000 Repaid.

Other than in advances for relief and to governmental agencies, the corporation's disbursements have totaled $4,600,000,000. Of that sum, almost half, $2,251,000,000, has been repaid by the borrowers, leaving $2,308,000,000 in loans still outstanding.

The Presidential committee now making a survey of Government lending, consists of the heads of the various lending agencies. Its purpose is to eliminate duplicating effort possibly by the consolidation of some of the agencies or through the elimination of others. The several agencies making loans for home mortgage relief and home building are a special object of scrutiny.

Between You and Me

Somewhat Naive Idea of Planning in a Democracy Is Expressed by a New Dealer of Faith.

By Raymond Clapper

THERE is faith enough among the New Dealers to move mountains if not a number of less bulky objects.

One of them, the other day, gave his idea of planning in a democracy.

"It is a method," he said, "by which the people themselves, through the public leaders they have chosen and the public agencies they have set up, can use foresight in moving toward more desirable conditions of living. The people choose the leaders; the people pass judgment upon the plans which the leaders present to them; and if they are not satisfied with the plans, the people can turn down both plans and leaders."

The idea might be worth a trial some time but after looking through the day's news and discovering how easily people are led by the nose, you wonder whether it is not a mistake to try it out first on the human race.

Look at the current progress report on civilization.

In the French Chamber of Deputies the drive for larger military appropriations begins with scare reports that Germany is building an army of 5,500,000 men with 4,000 bombing pilots ready for immediate war. . . . MacDonald, the eloquent pacifist premier, tells Commons that Britain must rearm. . . . Former Premier Saito of Japan at the risk of his life, cries out against reckless propaganda of Japanese army and navy men, which is kindling a new devil's cauldron and alienating this country which buys 95 per cent of Japan's raw silk export, providing customers for 2,500,000 Japanese families who live by raising silk . . . our own War Department tests a new tank that will run 60 miles an hour and fire 1,500 shots a minute . . . our Navy clamps down a censorship on new naval developments because of a spy scare . . . The United States Government seeks to bring the world to its senses by proposing an international pact for licensing and control of munitions, but few are even interested. Italy opposes it, and Austria, a tottering penniless invalid, shrilly demands equality of arms . . . conditions have come to the point where the chief voice raised to support the American stand for arms control comes from, of all places, the Du Pont munitions makers.

All of this when we have just played our semiannual joke by dunning our war debtors, knowing that only little Finland has any intention of paying, an ironic reminder that we sent men and dollars to Europe to win the last war for them, that some of the men did not come back and that almost none of the dollars did.

The United States has sought to exchange necessaries with other nations by mutually advantageous reciprocal agreements, but each one is too busy trying to build an economic fence around himself to consider a bargain in which both sides might profit.

At home we refuse to admit the foreign goods which would buy our surplus crops. We pay farmers because they grow too much and support 18,000,000 on relief because they can not buy food. We kill pigs and plow under crops and spend millions to develop new farms. And a committee of Congress, headed by a man who is talked of as the next Democratic leader of the House, listens solemnly to a wild tale of planned Fascist march on Washington to oust President Roosevelt.

Thumb-nail sketch of Francis Biddle, new chairman of the National Labor Relations Board:

Philadelphia descendant of Nicholas Biddle, who as head of the Second United States Bank, fought a fast but losing round with Andrew Jackson . . . knew President Roosevelt at Groton and Harvard, but not intimately . . . moustache, bald, pleasant smile . . . made his official bow in Washington by pushing the reluctant Department of Justice into prosecuting the Houde case . . . can produce results with a Harvard accent.

Reports come out of reliable quarters to the effect that consideration is being given to a regrouping of all public health and welfare functions of the Federal Government into one separate agency.

This would include the Veterans' Administration, the Treasury's Public Health Service, the Labor Department's Children's Bureau, the Interior Department's Bureau of Education and administration of whatever social insurance plans Congress may adopt. Under his reorganization authority, Mr. Roosevelt could create such an agency without prior action by Congress. Then human beings might receive as much attention from the Government as it is now giving to hogs and cattle.

Something about Senator Vandenberg suggests the late President Harding. It may be partly the voice, partly the Romanesque face, the faculty of being friendly all around, and that they were both Middle-Western editors when they went to the Senate.

Vandenberg keeps a typewriter at his elbow and writes out his speeches with two fingers. It's his old newspaper habit of thinking on a typewriter. Then he throws away the manuscript. He could stop right there, but he doesn't. He delivers the speech from memory.

U. D. C. Honors Soldier Dead At Convention

400 Delegates to New York Meeting See Wreath Placed on Statue.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—The men who wore the gray in the War Between the States were honored by the United Daughters of the Confederacy today at their first convention held in the North.

Four hundred delegates joined in a memorial tribute to soldiers of the former Confederacy and to U. D. C. members who died in the past year.

Flowers were placed by each State in an evergreen wreath, which was taken later to a Confederate statue in a New York cemetery.

Cotton bolls and pine cones were brought from the South for the "historical luncheon" attended by 150 today. Mrs. John H. Anderson, historian general, of Raleigh, N. C., presided.

The speakers were Claudia Hagy, of Wytheville, Va., editor of the Southern Magazine, official organ of the U. D. C., and Mrs. B. F. Cary, Virginia division historian.

Richberg Outlines NRA of the Future

should be made reviewable—not by an ordinary lawsuit, but by an appeal for aa declaratory judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Price Fixing Is Opposed.

Richberg reiterated his own belief that "as a general proposition, efforts to control prices and production through code requirements were inconsistent with the maintenance of a sound competitive system," and that price fixing would not eliminate destructive price cutting, but added:

"There have been, however, no final determination by the NRA concerning the extent to which such controls may be permissible or desirable in specific industries. Experience has shown that because of varying industrial conditions, the maintenance of fair competition requires a variety of restraints upon individual action to prevent such evils as (1) the employment of workers for inadequate wages and excessive hours; (2) the selling of goods through deceptive practices; or (3) the oppression of competitors and consumers by a monopolistic control of markets. • • •

"It seems to me business itself faces the choice as to whether it will advocate and seek to have enforced regulations which, in breeding more and more controls upon individual action, may steadily destroy the essentials of a competitive system."

In expressing his conviction "the purposes and principles" of NRA "should be and will be carried forward into permanent legislation," Richberg said "the "attempt to accomplish too much in too short a space of time" was the Recovery Administration's greatest 'impediment."

"We have been experimenting," he said, "largely with the theories of American business men. • • • These experiments have not always been successful. But they have always been educational. • • •

"I venture the assertion that under present conditions no law and no process of codification can establish successfully more than elementary standards of fair competition, or do much more than provide the basis for a gradual improvement i nthe conditions under which business men compete with each other and employes struggle for advantage in the benefits of their common efforts."

Birthday Fetes Again to Help Paralysis Fight

Roosevelt 'Lends' His 53d Anniversary for Dances to Aid Charity.

By Leon Dure, Jr.
(Post Staff Writer).

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 21.—President Roosevelt announced today that he has agreed "to lend my next birthday," January 30, for a second series of birthday balls to raise funds for the fight on infantile paralysis.

He made public correspondence originating with Henry L. Doherty, of New York, who headed the Nation-wide movement last winter and again offered the services of his local committee this January.

None of the money will go to the Warm Springs Foundation this time, as was the case last winter, Mr. Roosevelt explained. Instead, it will be divided, 70 per cent for orthopedic services in localities making the contribution, and 30 per cent for research.

In announcing his acceptance of Mr. Doherty's proposal, Mr. Roosevelt said that he first referred the matter to the board of trustees of the Warm Springs Foundation, which he himself organized during his years at the Georgia resort as a patient

The trustees met in New York last Friday and advised the President, through Basil O'Connor, treasurer, to accept the offer which last year brought $1,033,000 to the foundation. Accordingly Mr. Roosevelt wrote Mr. Doherty of his "hearty approval" of the recommendations of the trustees, and added:

"It gives me much happiness to lend my next birthday to the national committee for the birthday ball for the President for this purpose, in the hope that this effort will bring us nearer to the goal of forever ending the tragic consequences of infantile paralysis."

Mr. Roosevelt will be 53 on his next birthday.

Mr. Roosevelt also disclosed at his press conference, the first since he began his visit here Sunday night, that he is going over a mass of Government reports. As an example, he said that the Administration is considering consolidating many of the several dozen Government agencies engaged in making maps.

The President described himself as tremendously interested in this subject. He added that the Government has been making maps according to all kinds of scales, and that one of the purposes in view is to complete the standard key map of the United States.

Questions on winter relief plans brought no response, but Mr. Roosevelt took occasion to repeat his proposal made to Southeastern Governors here last night for closer cooperation between the Federal and State governments. Under his plan, which was accepted by the Southeastern Governors, the 48 States would be divided into regional groups to simplify liaison with the National Administration.

Rain and work again held the President indoors. He conferred again with Gov. Dave Sholtz of Florida, who was accompanied by Gov.-elect Bibb Graves of Alabama. In the late afternoon he received more than 100 delegates of the National Auditors Association, which is meeting in Atlanta.

Henderson Effects To Be Auctioned be taken from the family vaults to the auction block.

Included in the property are dresses Mrs. Henderson discarded years ago for gowns in newer styles. All of them were patterned in designs of now dead Paris dressmakers, and made of rich silks and embroidered satins. They are expected to go to Washington costumers and to Capital deputantes planning for fancy dress parties.

The entire Henderson estate, heavily encumbered, has been appraised at $1,500,000, after deduction of obligations. Several hundred thousand of this was said to be represented by the property to be sold.

In addition to Miss Arnold and her brother, Henry Arnold, the heirs include Dr. Paul Bartsch, of the Smithsonian Institution; Senator Gibson, of Vermont; C. K. Hasagama, the Henderson chauffeur, and Jesse Shima, a secretary.

Douglas Back in U.S., Silent on the New Deal

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Lewis W. Douglas, former Federal Director of the Budget, who resigned last September, returned to the United States today aboard the liner Conte di Savoia with "nothing to say about the New Deal."

Douglas, who was formerly a Representative from Arizona, said: "I have no job and I don't know what I shall do. I have nothing to say about Europe except that I improved my acquaintance with Renaissance art."

Night Air Cleanest, Greatest Pollution As Fires Are Coaled

City air is most polluted at 7:30 a. m., reports to the U. S. Public Health Service show, according to the United Press.

This maximum probably is due to morning firing of furnaces. Another bad hour is 3 p. m. From these figures, it seems apparent that when the man of the house goes down to tend the furnace, up shoot a lot of tiny particles for all his neighbors to breathe.

City air is clearest at 3:30 a. m., when most of the population is in bed.

Summer is less polluting than winter. Sunday, as might be expected, is the cleanest day of the week. Wind has a marked effect on the degree of pollution but rainfall brings little change.

House Speaker Fight Grows In Complexity

(Associated Press.)

The path to speakership of the new House became more of a maze yesterday when it was announced that a volunteer committee had been formed to boost Representative John J. O'Connor, of New York, and reports were received that three others probably would enter the contest.

Representative Lea, of California, Crosser, of Ohio, and Taylor of Colorado were being put forward by their friends in a belief that a deadlock might occur between the leading candidates—Byrns, of Tennessee, Rayburn, of Texas, and Bankhead, of Alabama.

In addition, advocates of Mead, of New York, Rankin, of Mississippi, and Woodrum, of Virginia, became more active. To add to the confusion, Representative Greenwood, of Indiana, announced, in letters to colleagues, his candidacy for the floor leadership. McCormack, of Massachusetts, although unannounced, is considered a strong contender for that post.

Representative Martin J. Kennedy (Democrat), New York, in making known that a "volunteer committee" was backing O'Connor, said "members from the North and Eastern States feel that with control of all major committees and House leadership, the South should be satisfied."

"The last Speaker from New York was Theodore M. Pomeroy, in 1869, a Republican," Kennedy said. "The South should let the speakership go to the State where industry and finance centers. It should be satisfied with reelecting Byrns as leader."

In his letters announcing his leadership candidacy, Greenwood, party whip in the present House, called attention to the probability that the next Speaker might come from the South. He said the next highest post should go to a Northern Democrat. He is being backed by the Indiana delegation, which is sending out letters of indorsement.

The movement for O'Connor, Kennedy said, might enhance the chances of Bankhead, of Alabama, chairman of the rules committee, for the leadership.

"Election of O'Connor as Speaker and Bankhead as leader is a possibility," he said. "Should Bankhead be elected leader, at least the chairmanship of the Rules Committee would come to New York because O'Connor is the ranking member."

Taylor, Crosser and Lea are veterans in the House. Crosser was a candidate for Speaker two years ago but threw his support to the late Speaker Henry T. Rainey. Lea is chairman of the Democratic caucus and Taylor is a member of the important Appropriations Committee.

Marketing Pact For Sugar Near

Philippine Agreement Is Tentatively Approved.

A marketing agreement for sugar produced in the Philippine Islands was tentatively approved by Secretary Wallace yesterday, the Associated Press reported.

The agreement is applicable to the 1934-35 crop and subsequent crops produced during the life of the farm adjustment act. It provides for allotment of the Philippine quota among processors and handlers, thus enabling the adjustment administration to make production adjustments among individual growers.

Under the agreement contracting millers, refiners and handlers agree not to ship sugar to the United States between October 16, 1934, and December 31, 1934; thus preventing the accumulation of Philippine sugar at United States ports during the early part of 1935.

At 3 cents per pound, duty paid, the raw sugar quota for the Philippines, 1,015,185 tons, is valued at more than $60,000,000.

Dickstein Calls Witness Fascist 'Plot's Cashier'

MacGuire, Bond Salesman, Grilled by House Committee.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Behind closed doors, the House committee on un-American activities questioned at length today Gerald C. MacGuire, Wall street bond salesman, regarding the report he was seeking to establish a facist corps in the United States to impose a dictatorship.

Amidst the reverberations of the charges laid before the committee yesterday by Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, the retired Marine Corps officer who said he was asked to head the Fascisti, the congressional investigators delved into reports a CCC camp at Elkridge, Md., near the National Capital, was planned as the Fascist headquarters.

At this camp, the committee heard, 500,000 men were to be concentrated for a march to Washington.

CCC Captain Questioned.

The committee recently investigated this camp. Its commander, Capt. Samuel Glazier, was summoned yesterday to testify again.

At Baltimore, Glazier said his testimony did not concern the Butler charges.

"I know nothing," he said, "about this reputed dictatorship scheme."

Representative John W. McCormack, chairman, asserted after today's hearing the committee was convinced the CCC camp and its officers had no actual connection with the reported Fascist plan.

Although MacGuire, who is associated with the Grayson M. P. Murphy firm of brokers, has steadily denied any participation in a Fascist plot, Representative Samuel Dickstein, vice chairman of the committee, said the broker "is hanging himself by his testimony."

Called "Cashier" of Plot.

Dickstein said MacGuire virtually identified himself in his testimony as the "cashier" of the movement.

The vice chairman said MacGuire had toured Italy, Germany "and other countries in Europe where Fascism flourishes" to make a study.

Norman L. Marks, MacGuire's counsel, said he went abroad solely for a vacation.

Grayson Murphy, by whom McGuire is employed, was recalled for a brief time by the committee. As he entered the committee rooms, he said "I never suspected McGuire of any such activities."

"The whole thing," Murphy added, "is just as though somebody walked in and accused me of stealing the moon. It looked to me like an absurd joke. Even if McGuire had been foolish enough and stupid enough to fuss around with such a thing, it would be obvious that it would be ineffective."

Butler Renews Charges.

The committee has emphasized that it had knowledge of the whole thing before Gen. Butler laid down his evidence yesterday.

At his Pennsylvania farm today, the fiery former Marine Corps commander reiterated the "seriousness" of his charges.

The general's testimony, Dickstein said, also involved another Wall street man, Robert S. Clark, as one of the moving forces in the movement.

While Attorney Marks issued a denial in Clark's behalf, the committee expected to subpena him.

Farms' Income Up by Billion

AAA Economists Estimate Yield Will Top 1933's by Huge Amount.

AAA economists yesterday estimated that farm income in 1934 would be $1,000,000,000—or more—above the return in 1933, the Associated Press reported.

Figures compiled by economic advisers to Secretary Wallace were cited, showing that from January 1 through September, 1934, returns to the farmer were $834,000,000 more than for the corresponding period of 1933.

The comparative figures for 1933 and 1934 were $3,479,000,000 and $4,313,000,000.

Benefit payments—money paid the farmer by the AAA to adjust production—were quite a factor in the 1934 rise. Through September, 1934, the producers had received $329,000,000 in benefit payments, compared with only $76,000,000 last year.

Comparative figures for the nine months' period in 1933 and 1934, respectively, for principal farm commodities include:

Grains, $442,000,000 and $508,000,000; cotton, $296,000,000 and $376,000,000; fruits and vegetables, $522,000,000 and $649,000,000; meat animals, $752,000,000 and $848,000,000; dairy products, $737,000,000 and $835,000,000.

Work at Pickwick Landing Will Employ 200 Men, Estimates Show.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 21 (AP).—Plans of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the unified development of water resources of the Tennessee River basin were advanced today with the announcement that $22,000,000 navigation and flood control dam will be built on the Tennessee River near Pickwick Landing in southwestern Tennessee.

Pickwick Dam—the third to be started under the TVA program—will be nearly 1½ miles long and 103 feet high. Earth dam sections will abut the concrete on each side of the river.

Carl A. Bock, assistant chief engineer of the TVA, said the dam was not now needed for power production, but provision would be made for later installation of six power units with a total capacity of 204,000 kilowatts.

The authority has two power dams under construction—the $34,000,000 Norris Dam on the Clinch River in east Tennessee and the $38,000,000 Job Wheeler Dam on the Tennessee River in Alabama.

With the Norris, Wheeler and Pickwick dams in operation, Bock said a seven-foot navigation channel would be made available from the mouth of the Tennessee River, at Paducah, Ky., to Guntersville, Ala., a distance of 385 miles. Pickwick Dam, he said, also will provide a measure of flood control.

The dam will form a lake approximately 53 miles long, backing up to the foot of Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals.

A navigation lock, 600 feet long by 110 feet wide, will be built. It will have a 61-foot single lift, claimed by the TVA to be the highest in the world.

1 Dies, 5 Hurt, Damage Heavy In Gulf Storm

Hailstones as Large as Baseballs Injure Three in Louisiana.

New Orleans, Nov. 21 (AP).—One person was drowned, at least five others injured and property and crop damage of thousands of dollars was caused by the blustery general rainstorm that drenched portions of five States today in its sweep into the Midgulf section from extreme southern Texas.

The body of George W. Green, colored, an 85-year-old teacher and preacher, was found today, in a water-filled ravine near Campti, La., which was shaken early today by the storm. Officers believed he stumbled into the water and drowned.

At Memphis approximately 11 inches of rain had been gauged from 11 p. m. last night until about 3 p. m. today and scores of families were temporarily morooned in low sections.

Heavy Damage.

Roofs were blown off, chimneys collapsed, trees were uprooted and windows were smashed as the storm swept that city. Street car service and automobile traffic were impeded by flooded subway underpasses.

Dr. I. M. Cline, meteorologist of the United States Weather Bureau here, reported that terrific rains sweeping the Mississippi Valley were the "most general" in recent years. The heaviest downpours occurred in Arkansas, west Tennessee, northwest Louisiana and east Texas. Precipitation ranging from 3 to 11 inches was reported.

The Mississippi coast was swept by gusty gales and the central portion of the State was visited today before noon by a severe electrical storm.

The surplus rainfall held a menace of overflow by rising streams. Crops and small farm buildings were damaged by the winds and highways were strewn with debris. Around Cleveland, Miss., the downpour extinguished devastating forest fires which had been raging for several days in the swamps.

Three Women Injured.

Spreading out in a general northeastern direction the storm dipped with tornadic winds into the Cerro Gordo, Ark., community last night, demolished several buildings and left three women injured.

Mill Lallah and Christopher Gaffney were injured in last night's severe hail storm at Minden, La., and Mrs. Joe Juggins, of Campti, La., was hurt as another tornado demolished two residences there early today.

Farm crops, buildings and highways were damaged in the central Mississippi storm, after a deluge in the Delta last night which drenched Greenville and other cities.

Damage was general throughout the storm area and at Minden pellets of hail, as large as baseballs, fell, almost denuding the town of plateglass. The damage was estimated at $25,000.

Rain, Mild Weather Forecast for City

A steady drizzel soaked Washington yesterday as the warm weather of the past week continued, and the mercury reached a maximum of 56 degrees at 2 p. m. Yesterday's minimum was 47 at 5 a. m.

Today will bring little change in temperature, and continued rain, the Weather Bureau predicted last night. The warm temperatures are due to a high pressure area to the south, the Weather Bureau said.

Snow and Rain End West's Long Dry Spell

Kansas City, Nov. 21 (AP).—Slow and steady rain which turned to snow in some localities brought joy tonight to farmers in the Kansas, Missouri and Rocky Mountain States.

A snowstorm swept into Kansas in the St. Francis region. Temperatures fell below the freezing mark.

Precipitation ranging from 1 inch at Arkansas City down to a quarter of an inch was reported from various Kansas communities.

Today's storm brought the first moisture many sections in the Rocky Mountain States have received for eight weeks. It brought rain or snow to the entire area between the Canadian and Mexican boundaries from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Omaha, Nebr.

In the higher mountain country the depth of the snow was from 8 inches to a foot, but in the plains region less than an inch fell and it melted rapidly.

Southeastern Wyoming and eastern Colorado particularly benefited from the storm. At Cheyenne, Wyo., a 56-day dry spell was the second longest on record.

Harvey Couch Unwilling To Leave the Southwest

Pine Bluff, Ark., Nov. 21 (AP).—Harvey C. Couch, utility and industrial leader of the Southwest, said here today he would not be willing to permanently leave Arkansas and the Southwest.

His statement was occasioned by a report in New York that he would be offered membership on the Edison Electric Institute board, and possibly assigned to its direction.

Mayor-elect, Ex-Convict, Pardoned by Roosevelt

President Roosevelt has pardoned Olin R. Holt, Mayor-elect of Kokomo, Ind., convicted of conspiring to violate the prohibition law. This announcement was made yesterday by the Justice Department, the Associated Press reported.

Holt commenced service of an 18-month penitentiary sentence May 24, 1930, and was paroled October 13, 1931. He was subsequently discharged from his parole. The pardon restores his citizenship rights.

Bank Once Run By Dawes Put In Receivership

Errors Charged in Assets on Books, Capital Stock Called Impaired.

Chicago, Nov. 21 (AP).—The Central Republic Trust Co., a heavy RFC debtor formerly controlled by Gen. Charles G. Dawes, was in the hands of a receiver tonight.

William L. O'Connell, of Chicago, was designated receiver by Circuit Judge John Prystalski after a charge by State Auditor Edward J. Barrett, who has started an audit of the bank, that assets carried on its books were erroneous.

Examination of the bank's books Tuesday night on Barrett's orders preceded his charge, which came after filing of suits in both Federal and State courts by the RFC in an attempt to collect $14,000,000 double liability from stockholders of the bank.

Owes $60,000,000.

The trust company still owes nearly $60,000,000 of the $80,000,000 it borrowed from the RFC when Gen. Dawes, former Vice President of the United States, who resigned as chairman of the RFC several months before the loan was obtained, headed the bank's board.

The examination disclosed, Barrett said in his petition, that the company had bills payable totaling $58,336,760.70, that assets carried on the books were erroneous and did not correctly reflect the true value, and that the value of certain resources did not equal the amounts for which they were carried.

The condition of the capital stock has become impaired, the petition charged, and "can not be made good."

"The bank was operating with insufficient protection of its assets in cash or readily convertible securities," the bill read. "The business was being conducted in an unsafe manner. The bank can not be reorganized and should be liquidated through receivership."

Dawes Now Out.

Although Gen. Dawes and members of his family own considerable stock in the Central Republic Trust Co., he has not been an officeholder since it was divorced from the Central Republic Bank and Trust Co. The banking business was made a part of the new City National Bank of Chicago, which is not involved in the litigation.

Manley Mumford, an attache of Barrett's office, said the action was not an attempt to get ahead of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but "merely a matter of collecting moneys due the bank and putting it into receivership."

It was not, he said, an attempt to collect from the stockholders on the double liability law. That, he averred, was a matter for the Federal Government.

Dawes refused to comment on any of the developments.

Gas Barrage Foils Stickup of Bank

Chicago, Nov. 21 (AP).—Four robbers who paused to disarm a policeman across the street from the southwest side of Beverly State Savings Bank they intended to rob fled empty handed today when a bank employe pressed a button that released tear gas against the invaders.

As the robbers drove up to the bank they saw a policeman, went over and took his gun and left one of their number to gaurd him while the others entered the bank.

Clarence Younkers, assistant cashier, stepped on a button. Tear gas sizzed from a dozen jets. The robbers and their 15 intended victims, including six customers, began to weep. The men left without firing a shot or taking a cent and fled after releasing the policeman.

'Epic' Campaign Cost Upton Sinclair $1,223

Sacramento, Calif., Nov. 21 (AP).—Upton Sinclair spent $1,223.18 in his unsuccessful campaign for the Governorship of California, he said in a schedule of expenses filed today with the Secretary of State. Sinclair said all except $130.34 was contributed.

The Democrat's expenses were about $800 more than those listed by Gov. Frank F. Merriam, Republican, who was returned to office.

Carol, Peeved at Slight, Won't Send Present

Bucharest, Rumania, Nov. 21 (AP). King Carol, it was learned today, resents a royal slight offered him by the King and Queen of Great Britain through their failure to invite him to the wedding of Princess Marina and Prince George.

Carol was said by friends to feel that since the British rulers invited Princess Helene, his estranged wife, to attend the wedding, royal etiquette required them to ask him also.

Although Carol is Marina's uncle, he is not sending her a wedding present.

The Rumanian King, friends asserted, feels doubly piqued because the British royal family also ignored his sister, Princess Elizabeth, whose husband, the former King George of Greece, has been invited to the London nuptials.

This attitude of indifference toward Carol on the part of British royalty was taken as a fresh indication of the widening breach between King George and the Rumanian King which began when Carol left Princess Helen for Mme. Magda Lupescu. This incident culminated in Carol's being asked to leave England.

Missouri Pacific Conference Fails

Reorganization Plan for Bankrupt Road Sought.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Trustees of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. pressed important debtors of the road to formulate a plan for reorganization of the bankrupt company, at a meeting here today.

Although several score of railroad and Government officials, bankers, creditors, bondholders and lawyers convened from various parts of the country, nothing concrete was achieved at the two-hour parley behind closed doors, and no specific proposals were presented, spokesmen for the group said.

A prepared statement, issued by L. W. Baldwin and Guy A. Thompson, trustees, said the trustees explained that "no one had yet submitted a plan of reorganization, and the trustees as representatives of the Federal court thought they were under an obligation to insist upon something being done in that direction within a reasonable period of time by either one or all of the various groups having substantial interests in these properties."

Field's Counsel Scores Insull's Prosecutors

Public Work of Nephew of Merchant Prince Cited in Argument.

Chicago, Nov. 21 (AP).—Stanley Field's attorney, in a fiery attack on the Insull case prosecutors, charged today they had attempted to cloud a life of high public service by bringing the Chicago philanthropist into the $100,000,000 mail-fraud trial.

Bent before the jury, Attorney Frederic Burnham shouted that "not so much as a picture" had been produced to link Field with the charges that investors in Samuel Insull's Corporation Securities Co. were swindled.

War Service Cited.

Field, a nephew of the late Marshall Field, Chicago merchant, "retired in 1919 to devote his life to the public," the attorney declared. He sketched Field's war service as overseas supply manager for the Red Cross, told of hospitals and museums the white-haired defendant had fostered, and cried:

"Like a bolt from the blue, there descended charges on February 27, 1933, that he was a thief, a rascal, a crook and a fraud. What motive would Mr. Field have for cheating the public he had determined to spend his life serving?"

A director of Insull's Corporation Securities Co., Field approved one of the financial statements the Government contends was falsified.

Case Nearing Jury.

Earlier the 14 men in the box—12 jurors and two alternates—had heard, in contrast to contentions that Insull's last stock was worthless, a claim that by the same tests the Government would be insolvent.

"They claim that Insull's stock was worthless, by its liquidating value," said Attorney John J. Healy. "Why, if the Government sold out its arsenals, its postoffices and its battleships and applied the proceeds to its bonds—the very same test—it would be insolvent right now!"

Milk License Held Invalid by Ruling

Cooperative and Dairy Win Injunction Against U.S.

Chicago, Nov. 21 (AP).—Federal Judge John P. Barnes today issued a permanent injunction restraining Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and other Federal officials from interfering with the Columbus Milk Producers Cooperative Association and the Meadowmoor Dairies, Inc., of Chicago.

The Columbus Cooperative is a Wisconsin corporation handling the milk of 120 producers.

The plaintiffs were threatened with loss of license, they said, because they did not observe certain phases of the Chicago marketing agreement.

In giving his ruling, Judge Barnes said:

"It is the court's opinion that the milk license in question is invalid because of lack of authority in the Secretary of Agriculture and in Congress to regulate the production of milk."

Hauptmann's Defense Jibes At U. S. Agents

Says Federal Men Brought Back to Bolster Prosecution.

Flemington, N J., Nov 21 (AP).—The re-entrance into the Lindbergh case of Frank Wilson and Arthur P. Madden, Federal investigators, causes the defense no undue concern, Lloyd Fisher, associate counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, Lindbergh kidnap-slaying suspect, said today.

"The invitation of the State in bringing these Federal agents back into the case is an indication of the weakness of the prosecution's case, I think," Fisher said.

In Touch With "Gang."

The attorney expressed doubts as to the value of Wilson as a prosecution witness. He asserted that when Wilson testified at the hoax trial of John Hughes Curtis, Norfolk (Va.) shipbuilder, in the summer of 1932, he had testified he had been in contact with someone or could reach someone who could in turn communicate with the "kidnap gang."

The State contends now, Fisher remarked, that Hauptmann carried out the kidnaping unaided.

Hauptmann today was given a thorough physical and mental examination in the Hunterdon County Jail by two physicians for the State, Dr. Barclay Fuhrmann and Dr. George Henry, and by a defense physician, Dr. F. A. Thomas.

Reward Sought.

The examination lasted an hour and a half. Dr. Thomas, on whose insistence the examination was so thorough, said Hauptmann appeared to be in good health and gave no indication he was mentally deranged. On the contrary, Dr. Thomas said, the prisoner showed he was possessed of normal temperament and an excellent memory and understanding, particularly of his youth and early manhood in Germany.

The third application for the $25,000 reward offered by the State of New Jersey for apprehension of the Lindbergh kidnaper was made today by John Lyons, of New York City, attendant at the gasoline station where Hauptmann tendered a $10 gold note a short time before his arrest in the Bronx in September.

Wide Reaction To Arms Plan 'Satisfies' U. S.

Saito's Attack on "Jingoes" Commended by Borah, Nye, Buchanan.

As the State Department expressed itself as "fairly well satisfied" with the reception given at Geneva Tuesday to its plan for the international control of munitions, former Premier Saito of Japan yesterday was applauded on Capitol Hill for his plea for success at the London naval conversations and his criticisms of the jingoes in his country.

Undersecretary of State William Phillips revealed that the department was encouraged by the reaction of other nations to this country's plea for an immediate treaty in which each government would agree to be responsible for its munitions inudstry by enforcing a license system for manufacture as well as shipment of arms.

He explained that Hugh R. Wilson, American Minister to Switzerland, who laid the plan before the disarmament conference steering committee on Tuesday, would continue to press the plain in conversations with representatives of other munition-making nations. Meanwhile, the plan has been given to three committees of the disarmament conference for consideration and development.

Saito Stand Commended.

Praise for the views expressed by Viscount Saito in an article appearing yesterday in the Christian Science Monitor came from Senators William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, and Representative James P. Buchanan, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

The State Department, pursuing the course it adopted at the outset of the London naval conversations, was silent regarding the Saito article as well as other developments at London which appeared to indicate the meeting there is near collapse.

Senator Borah, former chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, hailed Viscount Saito's statement as "a great contribution to a sane consideration of peace and disarmament," and added that "it is the most far-reaching and patriotic presentation of this subject I have read in recent days."

"I say patriotic," he added, "because in my opinion no better advice has been offered to his country. It is equally sound advice for all other countries. I do not know how much this advice may be heeded. Perhaps not at all. But it is to be hoped that it will lift the discussion of this question into a higher region than it has for some time occupied."

Consequences of Failure.

Senator Borah asserted that "it is no too much to say that failure at London will imperil the happiness, contentment and even the lives of millions of people, including our own."

Senator Nye, chairman of the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee, said this Government should "open its arms" to Viscount Saito, and added that "it is most heartening when men are willing to criticize their own countries and their participation in the insane armament competition which finds all the world headed toward increased ship and armament building."

He said he believed that one disarmament conference "utterly divorced from the influence of the munitions makers and men trained in waging wars would accomplish results so positive that the world would wonder why we have been so long in reaching such an achievement."

Senator Nye said he favored a further advance in curbing munitions manufacturers than Government licensing and a limitation of profits. He said the only way the traffic could be controlled would be through "nationalization of the principal manufacturers and producers of all munitions, weapons and arms necessary to wage war." He said this country should proceed to that end without waiting for international action.

Buchanan Lauds Ex-Premier.

Representative Buchanan, who is interested in keeping down appropriations, asserted that Viscount Saito "has made a sane, sensible statement, mapping out a course on which the London conference ought to follow." He said the former premier "deserves credit for so manly a stand in the interest of world peace."

The Friends Meeting of Washington yesterday sent a letter to President Roosevelt urging American support of the Japanese proposal to abolish all offensive and aggressive warships. The society told the President adoption of the Japanese plan "would make war literally impossible across the Pacific."

The society further asserted that "we do not regard the humanitarian motive of defending China from Japan's possible encroachments as justifying a trans-Pacific war" and that "no injustice that China can suffer in her present single-handed conflict with Japan can compare with the vast injustice of launching another World War."

The hotel, which has 84 rooms, was bid in at public auction by the building and loan company for $12,000. John Lewis Cochran, son of the late Judge John Cochran, of this city, will act as manager of the property.

'Parisian' Dead on Lonely Isle Called Companion of 'Empress' naval arms equal to Britain's and America's.

That diplomat made equally clear Japan's refusal to discuss political questions affecting the Pacific in connection with the naval conversations—so clear, in fact, that the British decided to drop their proposal made yesterday that Japan agree to guarantee China's integrity and the peace of the Pacific.

With the deadlock holding the naval talks unbroken, British circles admitted any chance for preserving the principles of naval limitation embodied in the Washington and London naval treaties seemed slight indeed.

The British delegation, however, seemed slightly less pessimistic, apparently hoping that the meeting with the Americans Friday might result in some new approach to compromise.

A British plan designed to end the impasse, which involved giving Japan equality in principle while denying it to her in fact, was rejected by Japan.

British quarters, after the meeting with the Japanese today, declined to confirm the fact that political issues had been raised Monday and today by Simon and Matsudaira.

Saito Called Courageous.

It was learned authoritatively, however, that the political outlook in the Pacific in the event no new treaty should be devised to replace existing instruments, which Japan means to denounce, was discussed, with Matsudaira declining to let political questions be raised during the naval talks.

Naval and diplomatic circles gave considerable attention to statements made by Viscount Admiral Makoto Saito at Tokyo, published in the United States, urging the powers to drop heavy naval building programs and sign a treaty which would prevent a building race.

American quarters termed them courageous statements for Saito to make at this time in view of the popular feeling in Japan. The British would not comment, but appeared to be giving the statements much attention.

Sea Captain Elaborates on Descriptions of Pair Found Starved on Beach; Tragic Riddle Deepens in Mystery.

Los Angeles, Nov. 21 (AP).—A flicker of light was thrown today upon the double death mystery of the Galapagos Islands, but in some respects the tragic riddle became even more baffling.

Radio reports to the Associated Press giving descriptions of the two persons who died of hunger and thirst on the forbidding little island of Marchena indicated one of them was Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, of Paris, a companion of the missing "Empress" of Charles Island, 160 miles away.

The identity of the second person, a larger man, became even a deeper puzzle. The description radioed by Capt. Manuel Rodriguez, of the tuna clipper Santa Amaro, did not tally with any of the few persons known to have been on the little group of equatorial islands.

"Empress Missing."

This gave rise to the question of what had become of the eccentric 38-year-old "Empress," otherwise the Baroness Bonsquet De Wagner, and another of her companions, Robert Philipson.

Apparently the Baroness and Philipson left Charles Island last July. Shortly afterward Dr. Friedrich Ritter, German nudist, wrote a letter saying something had happened that he hesitated to put into words. Capt. Rodriguez, whose crew found the bodies last Saturday on the black volcanic sands of waterless Marchena, told his story more in detail in today's message.

"The bodies were lying on their backs," the message from Capt. Rodriguez read. "The larger one was about 6 feet, bald head with small tuft of brown hair in back."

Theory Contradicted.

Scientists and mariners here familiar with all the persons on the archipelago at first had expressed a theory that the second man might be a Norwegian fisherman named Nuggerood, who lived at Wreck Bay at Chatham Island, but said "this description did not fit him.

"The other body was 50 feet away," Rodriguez reported. "It was 5½ feet long, very slight, with thick hair, 4 inches long. It wore pants, cut or torn off at knee."

"That sounds like Lorenz," said W. Charles Swett, chief officer of the exploration cruiser Velero III here. Swett knows all the characters in the archipelago, which is 500 miles off the coast of Ecuador.

G. O. P. Exhorted By Fess to Chart Its Future Course

An old-time Republican who was removed from Congress by this month's wave of Democratic ballots held yesterday that the G. O. P. must decide promptly on its future course, according to the Associated Press.

In fact, Senator Fess (Republican), Ohio, said the party's policies are a "serious matter" which can not long be left undetermined.

He said but one word—"Twaddle"—when asked about a recent statement from Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader. Commenting on the possibility that Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, might be a Republican Presidential candidate, Robinson had suggested the slogan, "Vandenberg, Vacuity and Vacillation."

As for himself, Fess said he hoped to find a "little alcove" in the Congressional Library where he could do some research work.

Japan's Army Warns Chinese To Obey Truce

'Revolutionary Diplomacy' of Nanking Irks Military; Armistice Cited.

Shanghai, Nov. 21 (AP).—Japan's army, spurning conciliatory tactics of Japanese diplomats, today warned China "there is no hope that the army will change" its attitude toward China until the Nanking government abandons its "revolutionary diplomacy."

A statement issued by the Japanese military attache, after the Japanese military officers stationed in various parts of China had conferred here for two days, accused the Chinese government of trying to delay enforcement of several items in the Tangku armistice agreement.

(The armistice at Tangku, signed May 31, 1933, ended Japan's drive in North China which in the course of two years of intermittent warfare cost China more than 50,000 men and the Japanese 10,000.)

Diplomat Sees Peace.

The statement, ending several months of comparative calm in Sino-Japanese relations, was in sharp contrast to the more moderate opinion voiced by Akira Ariyoshi, Japanese minister to China, who returned today from Peiping.

"Sino-Japanese cooperation is gradually bearing fruit in the north," he said.

The military attache explained that the army officers gathered here "to discuss the situation so as to achieve a common attitude."

He declared "the revolutionary diplomacy advocated by the Central Kuomintang (the ruling council of the Chinese government), and enforced by the Nanking government * * * led to the Manchurian and Shanghai incidents."

Charges "Whitewash."

"There have been attempts to whitewash the situation after these incidents," he added, "but, unless there is a radical change in the Chinese government's attitude, there is no hope that the Japanese army will change theirs."

The statement denied rumors said to be current in Chinese government circles that only part of the army favors "a strong attitude."

It explained that "such words as 'strong' and 'weak' referring to the attitude of the army, are meaningless; there is only one atitude and one policy in the Japanese army."

Italy Acts to Grab China's Air Market

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Rome, Nov. 21.—Italy is getting ready to drive the United States out of the Chinese airplane market, it was learned today.

A consortium has been formed by the three largest Italian aircraft manufacturers—under government jurisdiction and with government support—to sell Italian planes in China at cost.

The government will appoint Lieut. Furio Drago to head the Italian aviation school in China, which hitherto has specialized in bombing instruction, but now will branch out into all lines of aviation instruction in competition with the American school.

Drago formerly was attache to Gen. Chiang-Kai-Shek, China's military overlord. He replaces Maj. Mario de Bernardi, Schneider cup winner, who has returned to Italy.

This nation already has sent 20 bombers to China and is manufacturing more at Turin and Milan.

Peace Rejected By Paraguay, League Belief

Belligerent's Delegate Presents Counter Proposals at Geneva.

Geneva, Nov. 21 (AP).—The belief was expressed in League of Nations circles tonight that Paraguay already has rejected the league's proposals for ending the Chaco war.

This impression, delegates indicated, was created by the series of counter proposals to the league's plans for ending the bloody conflict between Paraguay and Bolivia in the South American jungles presented to the special assembly today. These counter proposals, presented by Dr. Ramon Caballero Bedoya, Paraguayan delegate, were regarded as destroying the league's projects.

The Associated Press learned that Assembly President Francisco Castillo Najera of Mexico had told his colleagues in the secret session of the assembly committee that "I, myself, think the Paraguayan proposals constitute a refusal."

The Paraguayan delegate had proposed the immediate cessation of hostilities and demobilization without delay of the opposing armies, and a nonaggression pact, in which "aggressor" would be defined, to be modeled on the multilateral pacts signed at London in 1933. The league generally interpreted Dr. Caballero's proposals as a reversal to Paraguay's previous position demanding adequate guarantees of military security before she would accept arbitration.

In speeches today, many members of the assembly voiced the conviction and warning that the league's law was being broken by the belligerents, and that it must be obeyed. Observers expressed the belief tonight that the organization was putting itself into a position where it must "do something positive" to halt the war if the adversaries reject the league's plans. Dr. Acosta Durels, of Bolivia, told the committee that Bolivia can reply as to whether she accepts the report within a maximum of 30 days. It must, however, be acted upon first by the league assembly.

Earlier, the great powers forestalled a surprise move by the Balkan states to scuttle the projected international embargo on further arms shipments to the belligerents.

A Turking delegate condemned the proposed embargo as "contrary to the spirit of the covenant" of the league.

"We believe," he said, "that an embargo can only be levied after the aggressor is determined. If it is imposed beforehand, we are convinced it may encourage the aggression." He asserted the Balkan entente of Yugoslavia, Greece, Rumania, Persia and Afghanistan supported his stand.

Italy, which had been regarded as holding similar views, joined with Great Britain, France and Russia in renouncing them.

Officers Surrender, Bolivia Calls Conscripts

Asuncion, Paraguay, Nov. 21 (AP). The ministry of defense issued a statement today belittling the importance of the capture of Picuiba on the northern front by Bolivian forces. At the same time, the ministry announced the capture of a group of Bolivian officers who surrendered at El Carmen on the southern front where the Paraguayans recently won a victory.

It was likewise announced the Paraguayan army in a drive on the Bahia Negra sector of the upper Paraguay River had taken a Bolivian fortified position.

La Paz, Bolivia, Nov. 21 (AP).—The Bolivian war ministry today called for service in the Chaco Boreal, effective December 20, conscripts of the year 1936. At the same time the ministry of foreign affairs announced that Bolivia "can not yet make known her attitude" toward steps taken by the League of Nations to end the war.

"We are waiting for the assembly of the league to approve the recommendations (made by its Chaco committee), after which Bolivia will express her opinion," it was stated.

German Decree To Place Curb On High Prices

Heavy Fines Provided for Violators of National Shop Code.

Berlin, Nov. 21 (AP).—Absolute power over Germany's prices today was placed in the hands of Dr. Karl Goerdeler, new Nazi commissar for prices.

A government decree divided the nation into districts, with leaders in each responsible to Goerdeler, and made his dictatorship over the amounts Germany will pay for what she has to buy complete.

Thousand-mark fines were threatened for firms which change prices.

The manifesto which accompanied Goerdeler's appointment November 5 declared the "economic unity of the Reich must remain guaranteed in the matter of price control."

In line with the drive to fight mounting prices and resulting dissatisfaction, government officials in three days recently closed 53 meat shops and bakeries in seven cities because their prices were above the decreed maximum.

At least four manufacturers and large dealers were taken into "protective custody" because of their "unsocial and uneconomic acts" in raising quotations, underpaying employes, or discharging workers.

The appointment of Dr. Goerdeler, Mayor of Leipzig and price dictator in the now much-maligned Bruening regime, was quickly followed by Justice Minister Guertner's warning that transgressors would be summarily dealt with, publication of figures supposedly showing that foodstuffs cost less here than in neighboring countries, and announcements of new minima.

The problem is admittedly as important as any the Hitler administration has faced, for the Nazis often have promised better times—low prices and work for all. Higher prices mean non-fulfillment of these promises, alienation of lukewarm followers, aroused fears of inflation.

Former Convict Gets 13 Years For Helping 3 Pals to Escape

Springfield, Mo., Nov. 21 (AP). How a former Atlanta Federal prison convict kept his promise to help three buddies escape after their transfer to the Federal prison hospital here was disclosed today with the sentencing of Harlin Karl Hall, 30, to 13 years in Leavenworth Peniteniary.

Hall was arrested August 22, at Union, W. Va., and returned here for trial.

George H. Hubbell, Assistant United States District Attorney, told the story.

"Hall drove here from West Virginia last November," Hubbell said. "He went to the hospital posing as a lawyer. He said Anthony Owen, one of the prisoners, was his client, and that he wanted to talk to him. He was carrying a brief case and apparently he played the part well, because officials at the hospital admitted him."

The indictment charged Hall with leaving three revolvers with prisoners, one of which went to Edward J. McNamara, Virgil S. Rice and Owen. Hall pleaded guilty to the charge that he had left a gun with Owen.

Soon after Hall left, Hubbell continued, the three men overpowered a guard at the hospital, climbed from a second-story window, and McNamara and Rice escaped over a wall, fleeing in a waiting car. Owen, apparently hurt when he fell from the window, was captured and has since been transferred to McNeil Island Prison, in Washington State. The other two have not been recaptured.

Hubbell said Hall had met McNamara, Rice and Owen while the four of them were in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta.

Rice was sentenced from Little Rock, Ark., October 12, 1928, to ten years for mail robbery, and McNamara from Washington, D. C., April 18, 1931, to ten years on the same charge. Owen was sentenced from Washington, D. C., July 12, 1932, to ten years on a mail robbery charge.

France Called To Excel Reich With Air Fleet

German Planes Newer, Ministry Says, Asking $230,000,000.

Paris, Nov. 21 (AP).—Minister of Air Victor Denain told France today Germany's planes are "swifter and more modern" and asked 3,500,000,000 francs (about $230,000,000) to make the French air force superior.

"Since Goering (Herman Wilhelm Goering, Adolf Hitler's minister of air) came to power, Germany has a military air fleet available and proclaims it," Denain told the chamber air committee.

"This air force is to be feared because it is composed of modern pursuit and bombing planes," he said.

Protesting against "panic fomenters" who pretend that Germany has thousands of military planes, the air minister estimated the Reich will have 1,000 to 1,100 planes at the beginning of 1935.

France has more machines, he admitted, but he declared the French models "are less swift and less modern."

Denain's plea for special appropriations outside the annual budget of 1,500,000,000 francs (about $108,700,000) came as Leon Archimbaud, reporter of the budget, told the chamber's army committee that the government would ask 800,000,000 francs (about $52,640,000) to strengthen French frontier fortifications.

Like the air minister, he said this amount would be requested in the special defense budget to be presented shortly.

So impressed was the army committee by Archimbaud's report on German rearmament, presented the day before yesterday, that it decided to ask the chamber to restore the 380,000,000 francs (about $25,000,000), which had been previously cut out of the regular fortifications budget.

Morgenthau Prepares Facts On Control of Liquor Traffic

(Associated Press.)

Secretary Morgenthau was reported yesterday to be gathering data for a formal report to the Nation on the Government's efforts to control the liquor traffic in the now-ending first year of repeal.

He will outline his findings in a radio address near the first anniversary of the passing of prohibition, December 5.

In official circles it was indicated that he will appeal to the drinking public—as did President Roosevelt in his repeal proclamation last December 5—for support of legitimate liquor realers.

Members of the new Congress are looking to his address for an official pronouncement of the Treasury's attitude toward proposed reduction of liquor taxes.

Some Representatives advocate a tax slash to eliminate the price advantage which they contend bootleggers hold over the legalized industry. Such tax reduction has been urged publicly by Joseph H. Choate, jr., director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration.

The tax on distilled spirits is now $2 a gallon. Whether it is to be cut to the old rate of $1.10 will be up for settlement early in the next session of Congress.

Revenues from the industry since repeal have fallen far below official estimates made prior to the return of legal liquor. Experts figure consumption of legal liquor this year will amount to only one-third to one-half of an average preprohibition year.

Night Club Hostess Convicted in Slaying

Montreal, Nov. 21 (AP).—Attractive, red-haired Lillian Morel, night club entertainer, was convicted of manslaughter today in connection with the death of William Owen, Montreal bond salesman, who bled to death from a knife wound in an apartment here October 5.

Miss Morel, also known as Dolores Lopez had pleaded self-defense, claiming in statements to police that "Owen was trying to choke me." Dr. W. Archibald told the court that the day after the slaying Miss Morel bore no fingerprints on her neck. Sentence was not immediately pronounced.

Aircraft Will Get Cold Weather Test

Navy Will Send Carrier to Maine Waters.

The Navy will make its first extensive test of operations of aircraft in Northern areas by sending the plane carrier Ranger to waters off Maine in January or February, the Associated Press says.

Secretary Swanson said at his press conference yesterday, "We want to find out how cold weather affects aircraft."

The Ranger, newest of the carriers, houses 72 airplanes. It is now at the naval operating base at Hampton Roads, Va.

Although the Navy sent two squadrons of planes to Alaska last summer, it has made no thorough investigation of plane operations in extremely cold weather, except in isolated instances where one or two planes have been involved.

Rock Wool insulation is made from molten limestone, which is poured into a jet of live steam, which literally "blows" it into particles of Rock Wool. This "wool" is blown into the walls of your home by a carefully regulated pneumatic pressure machine that works entirely from the outside of your home. See the miniature working model of this machine, on our Fifth Floor, blow Rock Wool into a section of a hollow wall. By this method, there is no dust, dirt, or inconvenience during the installation of the Johns-Manville insulation.

Truck Highway And New Lights To Aid Safety

Direction Signs and Signal System Now Being Installed.

Aiming a blow at mounting automobile fatalities and accidents in the District, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer yesterday announced two new programs, one embracing the establishment of an interstate truck route through the city and the other the installation of new traffic lights, some of them on an entirely new basis.

The truck route will follow the already-established by-pass for United States routes Nos. 1 and 2. It is being established partially as the result of complaints from residents on Maryland avenue northeast that the heavy vehicles make so much noise during the early morning hours that they are unable to sleep. Another reason for its establishment is to relieve somewhat traffic congestion and the possibility of accidents.

Entering the city by way of Bladensburg road northeast, trucks will be routed over New York avenue to Third street, south on Third to Maryland avenue, and west on Maryland avenue to Fourteenth street, where they will go south over the Highway Bridge.

Officials admit there is no law by which such a route can be established, but they believe direction signs, which were being erected yesterday, generally will be observed.

Light at 15th and H Streets.

Most important of the new traffic lights being installed is one at Fifteenth and H streets northeast, which will have automatic control, varying with the days of the week and the flow of traffic. It is to be placed in service immediately.

Instead of the electrical detector, buried in the street, which operates the installation at Massachusetts and Wisconsin avenues, this new light will be controlled by a mechanical timer, which will change the timing at different periods of the day, and on different days of the week to meet the varying changes in the traffic flow.

Timing has been fixed in accordance with the results of recent traffic counts at different periods durthe day.

"The new light will do what a good traffic officer is supposed to do in regulating the flow of traffic," traffic officials said yesterday.

Tomorrow morning new lights will be placed in operation at Eleventh and F streets, and Saturday new lights will be installed at Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue.

A new feature of a light to be installed at Seventeenth and H streets will be a double red light, one of which will control street cars making right turns.

Other intersections at which new lights will be installed include Thirteenth and Euclid streets, Connecticut avenue and Q and R streets and Wisconsin avenue and Albemarle street.

Held in Trunk Mystery

of collapse before the questioning was finished.

She said that the trunk contained only odds and ends when she stored it and that the lock was broken. This police subsequently verified.

Appears Voluntarily.

The woman had come from Lake George, N. Y., voluntarily when informed of the discovery. She had lived for the past two years with her parents in Upper Nyack and at various Brooklyn addresses.

In giving her history to police, Miss Clarke said she had been married 16 years ago to a man named Mahod, and that on his death six years later she resumed her maiden name of Clarke.

She said she was a school teacher and a bookkeeper. After her graduation from a Vermont college, she said, she taught school in Wilmington and Cabot, Vt., prior to 1924.

Until three years ago she said she was employed as a bookkeeper by various Long Island banks.

Investigation Started.

Police began an immediate investigation after the workmen made their gruesome find.

They communicated with Miss Clarke at Lake George, where she was on a hunting trip. Denying any knowledge that the bodies were in the trunk, she came immediately to the city.

The condition of the infants' bodies made identification of their sex and age virtually impossible, police said.

Virginia Calls 15 Witnesses For Bell Trial

Fredericksburg Court to Open Poisoning Case December 11.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Fifteen prosecution witnesses for the trial December 11 of Edward Bell, on charges of poisoning his invalid wife, were summoned by City Clerk J. W. Adams today on request of Albert V. Bryan, acting commonwealth attorney.

Among the State's witnesses will be Miss Irma Bell, daughter of the accused man; Dr. John E. Cole, Mrs. Bell's physician and several nurses, chemists and pharmacists.

The 15 witnesses summoned today were J. Conway Chichester, city sergeant; W. B. F. Cole, Fredericksburg commonwealth attorney; Woodrow C. Jones, employe of Mr. Bell's furniture store; Dr. Charles P. Rector, pharmacist; Dr. Charles H. Lewis, pharmacist; Miss Ruth Hill, nurse to Mrs. Bell; Miss Bell, Dr. Cole; Rebecca Burrus, colored cook in the Bell home; Thomas A. Balthis, Richmond chemist; Dr. Edwin Wood, of the University of Virginia faculty, and C. Braxton Valentine, chemical director of the Valentine Meat Juice Co., Richmond.

No witnesses have been called to date by Mr. Bell's counsel. Additional prosecution witnesses are expected to be summoned, as Mr. Bryan obtained a special court order yesterday to call as many as 30.

Six of the State's witnesses testified before the grand jury when Mr. Bell was indicted October 21. Mr. Chichester, Mr. Jones, Dr. Rector, Mrs. Jones, Miss Hill and Dr. Cole were questioned at the investigation.

Mr. Bell's prominence in city affairs and his wide acquaintance here led to the belief in some quarters that an outside jury should have been called for the trial.

Judge Frederick C. Coleman yesterday selected a venire of 24 men as jury candidates.

Chest's Drive Falls $104,800 Short of Goal

Late Pledges May Reduce to $50,000; Workers Win Praise.

had failed?" he asked the meeting. He said that at the start of the campaign he did not believe it would get as near its goal as it did.

Workers yesterday morning were faced with securing $269,455.38 if the drive was to go over the top. Last night they reported $164,655, a great record for the final day, which had seen most gifts already made.

The best record for yesterday was made by the group solicitation unit, of which Walter B. Clarkson is chairman. This group took in $53,253.78. The drive ended with its having secured 89.4 per cent of its quota.

Next was the governmental unit, chairmaned by Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, with $47,035.60 standing as its day's record. The unit secured more than 106 per cent of its quota.

The metropolitan unit of Joseph D. Kaufman ended the drive with 80 per cent of its quota. Its collection on the last day of the drive was $32,155.14.

Special gifts unit, headed by Charles Carroll Morgan, recorded $30,805 as its last day's effort and ended the drive with 93 per cent of its quota raised.

144 Per Cent By Capital Unit.

Col. H. O. Atwood, reporting for the Capital unit, showed $1,405.48 as the day's effort, making the unit's record 144 per cent.

Mr. Rust presided at the meeting and before he introduced the other speakers gave unstinted praise to all the Chest workers in the campaign.

The meeting was opened by an invocation delivered by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, who later spoke to the assemblage and said that he believed the group of workers was the most representative of the civic consciousness of the community of any ever gathered together in the city.

Clarence Phelps Dodge, president of the Chest, asked all of the workers to continue their interest in the Chest during the year. He expressed deep appreciation to the workers not only for their efforts in the solicitation of funds but for increasing good-will in the community.

Many other of the prominent members of the campaign committee were introduced. Among them were Laurence E. Rubel, chairman of the publicity committee, who said that during the drive Washington newspapers had given more than 30 pages of news and feature stories and the same amount of advertising space.

Mr. Rubels introduced his two aids in the handling of the publicity, James Rotto, in charge of written publicity, and W. W. Wheeler, who headed the speakers' bureau.

Others Introduced.

Among the others who were introduced were Corcoran Thom, E. C. Graham, Frederic A. Delano, Arthur Hellen, John H. Hanna and many others.

Music by the Army Band preceded the meeting.

A feature of the drive yesterday was the gift of $1,000 cabled from Paris by Gen. John J. Pershing. This gift was unsolicited.

Contributions of $100 and over reported yesterday were as follows: $2,500, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Woodward; $1,500, Arcade Sunshine Co., Inc.; $634.50, employes of Raleigh Haberdasher; $500, Mansbock Bros.; $400, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph L. Golden Wedding Fete Held by H. W. Barths

Cambridge, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Mr. and Mrs. Herman W. Barth celebrated their golden wedding anniversary yesterday at their home on Maryland avenue. The occasion was a quiet one, marked by a family dinner and the congratulatory messages of their many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Barth were married in Baltimore, Mrs. Barth having been Miss Anna Fisher, of that city. Mr. Barth is a native of Germany, having come to the United States from Schmoellen at the age of 14. He studied sculpturing at the Maryland Institute.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Christmas savings checks will be sent late next week to nearly 4,000 persons by three Cumberland banks, the total running to approximately $120,000.

This is an increase over last year, but considerably under the totals paid prior to 1930. One of the banks has 2,230 depositors, who will be paid $80,000 on December 1.

Sewer Project To Employ 150

Salisbury, Md., to Advertise for Bids on Bond Issue of $53,000.

Salisbury, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—The mayor and council yesterday directed City Clerk John R. Laws to advertise for sealed bids for the purchase of $53,000, par value, City of Salisbury (Md.) water and sewer extension bonds to be dated February 1.

The bonds, with semiannual interest, February and August 1, mature serially from 1935 to 1964 and bids will be opened at the Salisbury City Hall, at 8 p. m., December 10.

The proposed sale is the first step in launching a program for water and sewer extension and improvements on the municipal park.

Actual construction work will start, according to Mayor E. Sheldon Jones, by December 15, giving employment to more than 150 men.

City Engineer E. Clark Gardner is authority for the statement that this will be the first of a large program to be undertaken under the loan and grant agreement of the PWA.

State Relief Head Acts to Cut Cost

Report on Expenses Asked in Frederick County.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—In compliance with a request from William A. Smith, Federal relief director in Virginia, Miss Margaret Hurst, who is in charge of the administration of Federal relief in Winchester and Frederick County, is preparing a report which will set forth the expense of administering aid in this area.

"It is our desire," the letter issued by Mr. Smith declared, "that all unnecessary expense be eliminated."

He requested that a study be made to determine if it is possible to combine the duties of some and eliminate functions which duplicate the efforts of other welfare organizations.

Board Orders Rubber Dispute Elections Held

Balloting Allays Strife, Is Reply to Protesting Companies.

Legal balloting allays instead of provokes strife, the National Labor Relations Board held yesterday in ordering collective bargaining elections among employes of two Akron rubber companies.

The elections were opposed by the employers, the B. F. Goodrich Co., and the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., as likely to produce restlessness. In both cases the board disagreed with the contention of the companies in almost identical language.

"We think it is unnecessary," the board explained, "to do more than state the board's adherence to the common belief that the device of election in a democratic society has, among other virtues, that of allaying strife, not provoking it.

"That potentiality of strife now exists in this plant because there are contending factions of employes, we have already shown. Certainly Congress in authorizing elections to be held in the public interest did not contemplate that contention must have reached the proportions of a threatened strike before an election order was issued."

Locals of the United Rubber Workers Federal Labor Union, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, requested the elections, to be held within three weeks. Some 20,000 employes will be involved.

William Green, American Federation of Labor president, said he was "pleased" with the decisions.

"The American Federation of Labor," he said, "will abide by the result of the election and is willing to be governed by the will of the majority."

Fraud Charged On Army Rents

Landlords and Officers on Duty With National Guard Accused.

The War Department is making an investigation of alleged collusion between landlords and noncommissioned officers in the Regular Army on duty with National Guard units through which some of the men were receiving excess payment for their Government-rented living quarters, the Associated Press says.

Seven actual cases of irregularities have been discovered among 352 noncommissioned officers.

No Government living quarters are available for noncommissioned officers on National Guard duty, it was explained, and quarters were rented for them at not more than $35 per month.

Between 1927 and the time the law was recently changed to allow noncommissioned officers 75 cents per day instead of being provided with quarters, the Government entered into 3,000 leases.

An investigation made by the Comptroller General's office, it was said, showed that some of the noncommissioned officers, through collusion with their landlords, were pocketing the difference between the actual rental and the amount allowed by law.

School Board Vacancy May Change Make-Up

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—William A. Strohm, Democrat recently appointed postmaster of Annapolis, today resigned as a member of the education board. Gov. Ritchie will be called upon to name a successor, although the forthcoming change in State administration may also bring about a shift in the board's make-up.

As far as possible, however, efforts have been made to keep school affairs out of politics. Of the five members of the board, the Republicans are in the minority, although Mr. Munroe, Republican, has been president for several years. Although he was elected to the post of county clerk, Mr. Monroe said today he does not contemplate severing his connection with the school board, at least for the present.

ark, Chicago, Nashville, St. Louis, San Francisco and San Diego received the bills.

"These notes have caused us just about as much misery as any that have ever been made," Murphy remarked.

Refuses to Tell of Tip.

How the tip that narrowed the search to the New York-New Jersey area came, he refused to hint.

Arrested in Tenafly, in a little house at 47 Railroad avenue, almost on the village boundary, were persons who gave the names of Egidio Giardi, sculptor, artist, and dyemaker, said to reside there; Arthur Givina, and Mary Petti, described as the housekeeper.

In New York, arrests included that of Joseph Lariccio, captured in a printing plant on East Tenth street where the police said two Nazi newspapers had been published until suppressed last week when the editor of one was locked up for libel.

Two men, giving the names of Jack Orsini and Michael Conti, were taken in an East Eighteenth street apartment in Manhattan, where the police said they found papers and chemicals. Another, said to be Victor Castorino, was arrested in a house on 108th street, Corona, Long Island, and a man listed as Salvatore Malso was arrested in Newark.

Not booked yet, according to information here, they will probably be charged with conspiracy to counterfeit, Murphy said.

Ten Will Be Arraigned Today on U. S. Charge

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Ten persons arrested at Tenafly, N. J., and in nearby cities as members of a huge counterfeiting ring will be arraigned tomorrow before the United States Commissioner at Newark, Robert L. Godby, head of the Syracuse office of the Secret Service, said.

"We found a complete photo-engraving plant set up in the basement of the house at Tenafly," Godby said, "on the second floor we found a photographer's gallery and in the attic we came on a printing press.

"We found 700 new $100 bills, just off the press, and we seized plates for printing $20, $10 and $5 bills.

Bills Expertly Forged.

"These bills were about the best I have run across in years. They were so well executed that many of them might easily have passed unnoticed through bank tellers' hands."

A number of well-executed bills recently have found their way from the large New York banks and the New York Federal Reserve Bank into the Treasury Department itself, Godby stated.

With ink, Godby said, red and green lines, "clever imitations," had been drawn on the bills to represent the red and green bits of silk to be seen in actual United States paper currency.

Hull and Peek Clash on Trade

tinued as a lending agency is the present controversy over whether the banks are adequately meeting the credit needs of industry.

At the recent convention of the American Bankers Association, speakers asserted that billions of dollars in credit had been made reciprocal agreements likewise is questioning.

Peek for Concessions.

But the real clash of viewpoint comes on the Peek proposal for junking the most-favored-nation policy. Mr. Peek would have this Government negotiate bilateral trade agreements under which this country would give exclusive concessions to nations giving the United States concessions.

This would be achieved by levying a low tariff on commodities from the country giving us concessions and a higher tariff on the same commodities from another country. Another device would be to institute import quotas. The President has authority to pursue both of these courses, if he wishes.

Hull Expression.

Secretary Hull, as expressed in a recent speech before the National Foreign Trade Council, takes the view that such regulation of foreign trade causes an arbitrary diversion of trade from one country to another, does not increase the whole of world trade and "is a reversion to the crudest and worst form of mercantilism which preceded the introduction of the regime of liberal commercial policy in the period of modern industrialism."

He believes that such a policy "drives inevitably in ever-widening circles to the regimentation of the whole system of production, and ultimately to a regulation of consumption."

Secretary Hull further contended that the United States must stand for the most-favored-nation policy, "as calculated to bring down trade barriers generally" in order to obtain agreements which will be "fair and beneficial to the contracting parties and at the same time fit advantageously into the international scheme."

the case with the examinations for the alcohol tax unit.

Found Easy to Handle.

"This kind of an examination is economical, easy to handle, gives accurate results, and is the best-known method of sifting out persons with the greatest native ability."

The commission pointed out that an examination, identical in form but not in the questions asked, was given in 1931 for prohibition agents upon the request of Amos W. Woodcock, dry administrator.

The injustice of the recent examination, according to a consensus of those aggrieved, is not so much in the type of examination but that it should have been required at all.

Contrary to the belief of many members of Congress who voted for the "rider," the statute required Government employes with full civil service ratings to take a second examination merely because they had been transferred to another unit of the Government.

When the old Prohibition Bureau was brought into the competitive classified civil service in 1927, the law provided that the terms of office of the incumbents who did not already possess a civil service status would expire within six months.

Passed Civil Service Tests.

"Therefore," Mrs. McMillin said, "not one of the persons appointed in the Prohibition Bureau and subsequently transferred to the Department of Justice in 1930 was blanketed into the classified civil service. These persons all competed in civil service examinations and received their appointments through regular procedure by selection from the head of eligible registers."

The commission was under an obligation in the examinations for the alcohol tax unit investigators "to avoid a type of examination which would afford advantage to the incumbents of the positions," she said, "in view of the apparent purpose of Congress."

"Rider" Directed at 700.

The "patronage rider," which was sponsored chiefly by Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, was admittedly aimed at ousting the 700 investigators who had been hired by Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau several months after being released with the abolishment of the Prohibition Bureau.

McKellar complained that the majority of the investigators were "Hoover Republicans" because they had been appointed originally during the Republican administration.

His "rider," however, was made so broad that it included several hundred more investigators who had been shifted immediately to the alcoholic beverage unit of the division of investigation, Justice Department, without interruption of service.

It was also interpreted by Attorney General Cummings as applying to other grades of employes, but McCarl ruled adversely on this point.

An appeal from McCarl's ruling has been taken to the District Supreme Court by counsel for the 900 employes who seek an injunction restraining Secretary Morgenthau from actually dismissing the investigators.

A Boost Or A Blow?

An excellent impression is created by Admiral Saito's very frank and liberal article on Japan's naval policy, as printed under his name in the magazine section of yesterday's Christian Science Monitor. Unfortunately, however, the ultra-patriotic attitude which the former premier condemns among his countrymen seems all too apt to carry the day in the London conversations. It is the position which Admiral Yamamoto takes in the negotiations, rather than the position taken by Admiral Saito in print, which will prove the controlling factor.

In London all compromises are now being shattered on the Japanese refusal to accept any formula of limitation which could tend to interfere with their demand for factual equality. Neither the granting of quantitative equality in principle, nor continuation of qualitative limitation which would eliminate or limit certain types of warships, appears to be acceptable to Tokyo. None will quarrel with Admiral Saito's forthright assertion that a naval race "will only result in a setback to civilization and feed the fires of hate." But in spite of that courageous and irrefutable utterance, the drift is all in the direction of catastrophe.

Actions speak louder than words. And the fine doctrine offered by this leading Japanese liberal must be assessed against the irreconcilable attitude the Japanese delegation is taking in London. Yet it must be regarded as of great significance when a man of the influence of this old statesman publicly denounces the militarists of his country for a naval agitation which goes "beyond the point of fair play." Nor, as he says, are all extremists of a single nationality.

With a similar attitude of conciliation dominant in each of the delegations at London, rational agreement on principles would not be hard to find. Before it is too late all should concentrate upon the urgent desirability, as Admiral Saito suggests, of giving civilization "a boost, not a blow in the face."

Population And Planning.

Taken by themselves, population trends point to prosperity during the next quarter of a century. A declining birth rate indicates that there will be fewer children to support and the full burden of old age dependence will not yet have materialized. The proportion of our population in the productive ages, from 20 to 60 years, will be higher than it has ever been, or is likely to be thereafter.

Such are the conclusions of O. E. Baker, vital statistician of the Department of Agriculture, in his recent address to the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities here. Dr. Baker is particularly concerned with the agricultural problems growing out of current population trends. But the facts he brings to light are of general importance. Our economic system has given little heed to the shifting trends of population in the past. Even a casual study of the present downward curves suggests that no economic group can afford to ignore them in the future.

During the last 13 years, Dr. Baker points out, the decline in births amounts to 25 per cent. If this rate continues, and if immigration remains as sharply restricted as is now the case, the population of the United States will reach a peak at 131,500,000 in 1945, while two years later a decrease will become apparent. It seems probable that the curve representing births will not fall as rapidly in the next decade as it has in the recent years of acute depression. But there is no reason to suppose that the general downward trend will be reversed.

As a result, permanent expansion of domestic agricultural markets can scarcely be expected. The aggregate consumption of foodstuffs per capita has remained virtually stationary for the last 30 years, and there is no reason to suppose that the individual's needs for nourishment will increase. Likewise industries that are accustomed to expand their operations annually will find that the surplus can no longer be absorbed by a growth in population. New demands will be largely contingent upon higher purchasing power.

Theoretically, a large proportion of the people concentrated in the "productive ages" should mean prosperity. But if a considerable percentage of this group is unemployed, social and economic problems become more acute. More people demand work, while the relative number of consumers is gradually diminished. Undoubtedly this plays a part in the economic maladjustments by which the country is now afflicted. And as the trend toward a smaller population develops it may become a still more significant factor in our national economy.

Dr. Baker's optimistic suggestions regarding the next quarter century can not be expected to materialize unless these significant trends are fully considered in current economic planning.

Unpopular But Sound.

Comptroller McCarl's ruling that FERA funds may not be used to finance low-cost housing projects in the District will undoubtedly bring sincere protests from many quarters. But before jumping to the conclusion that the Comptroller General has jeopardized effective plans for housing the needy and substituting useful employment for relief, it would be well to consider the reasons for his decision, and also to analyze the local housing project on its merits.

Certainly the legal objections to using emergency relief funds for projects of a permanent nature appear to be well taken. Not only does the law fail to authorize outlays of this sort, but, as the Comptroller points out, the FERA is trenching upon a field of activity which the PWA is specifically empowered to exploit. Mr. McCarl has, therefore, performed a public service in trying to check the evil results, already too apparent, encouraged by the absence of a strict accounting from dispensers of relief funds.

Congress has made it possible for emergency appropriations to be used in many unexpected and unforeseen ways. The vigilance exercised by the Comptroller provides a much-needed, although circumscribed, check upon such disbursements. By refusing to acquiesce in loose interpretations of the discretionary powers of spending conferred upon the FERA, he is helping to conserve public funds, needed for direct relief purposes, and is thus in the long run acting in the best interests of the unemployed.

Furthermore, the McCarl ruling has stopped the District authorities from embarking hastily upon a plan that seems otherwise defective and slipshod. For example, it has been estimated that the approximately $400,000 allocated to the housing project would have provided work at union wages for 2,662 men on relief rolls for a period of five months. If the entire sum were paid out in wages, however, each man would receive only about $150, or $30 per month, which is scarcely the union scale.

These observations must not be taken to minimize the importance of low-cost housing projects designed to improve living conditions in cities, like Washington, where many families are existing in shamefully unfit quarters. They are, however, intended to show the need of a careful and systematic approach to a solution of the problem. That can not be secured by permitting housing plans to be developed primarily as relief projects, in a manner more certain to result in disappointment because of exaggerated anticipations.

Reviewing The Objective.

A committee headed by Henry I. Quinn is preparing to investigate all phases of high school athletics in the District. The inquiry is a direct outcome of the rumpus which brought cancellation of all games remaining on this year's football schedule. Yet it will be much broader than was that controversy. There are indications that it may become an important step toward lifting high school athletics and physical education to a higher plane.

Aside from the conduct of players and spectators at football games, there is a growing dissatisfaction with the physical training afforded by Washington schools. Perhaps too much emphasis has been placed on the competition between highly coached teams representing the various schools. A reasonable amount of athletic rivalry is wholesome and stimulating, but it should not be permitted to interfere with healthier programs of physical training in which all students may participate. Certainly the trend toward commercialization of sports ought to be discouraged.

The District Education Association adopted a resolution last week, urging "a complete program of physical education through intramural sports in the public schools." The underlying objective of the schools' physical training departments may well be reviewed. Mr. Quinn's committee has an opportunity to turn the recent indiscretion of the authorities, who aggravated an unfortunate student row, into a comprehensive movement to improve the character of the physical education offered by Washington's schools.

Tell It To The Marines.

It will be a relief to many who may be described as New Dealers, and to many who may not, to learn that Smedley Butler has declined a somewhat nebulous offer to become dictator of the United States. "The whole affair," remarked the former Marine Corps general, "smacked of treason to me." Smacked is hardly the word, but the general, who is now a lecturer, seems to have learned the artistic value of understatement.

The plot, if plot it was, may prove to be thicker by the time the congressional committee on un-American activities, catches up with all of the alleged brokers who allegedly tendered the dictator job to the general. At the moment it runs a bit thin.

A Mr. MacGuire, according to the general, first broached the idea that the general should lead a Fascist march of 500,000 veterans to Washington. "He felt," the general was quoted as saying, "that such a show of force would probably result in a peaceful overturn of the Government. He suggested that we might even go along with Roosevelt and do with him what Mussolini did with the King of Italy. Mr. MacGuire insisted that all of his program was constitutional."

Mr. MacGuire, summoned before the committee, identified himself as a bond salesman—not as an authority on the Constitution—and called the general's story "a publicity stunt." "His statements are untrue," said Mr. MacGuire. "There never was such a plot."

Whether plot or stunt it was good for plenty of publicity, and it arouses a certain craving for more detail. When a government is to be overthrown, peacefully or not, it may be rather frivolous to wonder about so trivial a matter as the bonus. Nevertheless it would be interesting to know why the alleged brokers selected as their first bet one whose platform of late has been confined almost exclusively to bonus advocacy.

A Far-Reaching Suggestion.

President Roosevelt suggests that the States form groups following regional lines and appoint a single individual, presumably a State Governor, to act as a liaison officer with Washington.

Closer Federal-State cooperation has already been assisted to some extent by the annual conferences of Governors in which all parts of the Union are represented. And last year a further step toward strengthening interstate ties was taken by the formation of the New England Conference of Governors, to deal with regional problems. The President's recommendation, however, goes beyond mere exchange of advice and opinions about matters of regional concern. Indeed, this proposal might conceivably lead to the evolution of a new type of governmental unit, with consequent subordination of the State.

For many years it did not seem to matter greatly that State boundaries frequently follow arbitrary lines of demarcation. Although conflicts sometimes arose between the Federal and State Governments concerning the limits of their respective authority, there was no pressing need for a realignment of the subordinate governmental units.

Of late, however, cooperation among groups of States has become increasingly essential as governmental activities have embraced a larger field. Control over oil production, for instance, requires agreements among the States which are large producers. Flood control and hydro-electric power developments likewise can not be effectively undertaken by a single political unit. Developments must follow natural lines which usually ignore artificial State boundaries.

Industrial developments, too, disregard State lines and call for an extension of the area of political control. Much can be done through regional organization to eliminate causes of friction due to differing legislative policies applied to competing industries. Interstate conferences will be especially necessary in the development of systems of social insurance which the States will be called upon to work out for themselves. The inequalities produced by the glaring lack of uniformity in our protective labor laws have been productive of great injustices to both workers and employing industries.

If such inequalities are not to be perpetuated and made still more oppressive, the responsible heads of State governments must come together to formulate uniform legislative programs that will cover natural competitive regions instead of embracing only areas which are often artificial from all but the politician's viewpoint.

A Corner On Princesses.

When Prince George selected Princess Marina to become his bride, Greece must have heaved a sigh of relief. For eligible princesses in Greece are a drug on the market. There's one in every castle.

The rumor is now prevalent that the future King of England had his eyes on Marina of Greece, but that his brother beat him to the prize by taking an airplane instead of a train. Apparently things begin to happen when Greek meets prince.

If it is any consolation to the Prince of Wales, there are no less than five beautiful and eligible Greek princesses left who would probably give their hats to become the future Queen of England. And hats which in no way resemble those of the present Queen.

Marina's sister, Elizabeth, is said to be the most attractive and it is no secret that her hat has been in the matrimonial ring for several years. Marina's first cousins, Princess Irene, Princess Catherine and Princess Eugenie, also hold tickets in the Royal Sweepstakes, with equal chances of winning. Another cousin is Helen, divorced wife of Rumania's Carol.

It may be that Helen feels she has had enough of thrones for awhile and that royal housekeeping is not all it's cracked up to be. Even at that, it would take a very strong woman to say "no" to the world's most eligible young man.

Some one is offering for $5 a book on "How to Live Without Money." He doesn't say what he wants with the $5.

Anyone who has talked over a rural party-line telephone shouldn't feel nervous before a mike.

It may be easy for a politician to make a turn to the left, but it's becoming increasingly difficult for a motorist to do it.

In Arlington County.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In nearby Arlington County your readers may, if interested, observe the theft of a county government.

Arlington residents, after suffering for a generation under misgovernment and corruption, took steps to throw out the professional politicians and to secure a board of their own choosing and to engage a county manager. This was doubly important because the county was about to spend several millions of Federal and local tax money in putting in a sewer system. Here was an opportunity for graft.

At elections five seemingly decent citizens were chosen as commissioners and a well-recommended man was engaged as county manager. Today only two members of the elected board remain, and there has even been a demand that the county manager quit his contract and open the way to the appointment of some member of the rotten political machine.

How has this come about? First, one of the elected board members "moved away" and his place was filled by appointment by a local judge. There was some pretense that some obscure statute authorized this appointment. The wishes of the Arlington residents were not consulted. Then a "tempting real estate offer" led another member of the elected board to resign and his place was filled in a similar fashion.

But the gang still lacked a majority of the board, so the chairman was accused of "neglect," "malfeasance in office," etc., and was actually impeached and removed. Again, his place was filled by a member of the political gang. Then came the drive to remove the county manager, who had, in fact, been hired for a year by the elected commissioners.

If any one doubts the above statements he may observe the sayings, doings and votings of Garnett, Smith and McShea, the appointive members. GILSON GARDNER.

Reciprocal Responsibility.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With the success of the Community Chest campaign apparently assured, it seems pertinent to raise the question of how some of the agencies benefiting by this outpouring of public funds are prepared to reciprocate in meeting the responsibility placed upon them.

There comes to mind the comparatively recent but already forgotten instance in which a victim of a heart attack, carried to Gallinger Hospital, seems to have received rather perfunctory treatment, to put it politely, as he is reported to have died shortly afterward.

The effusive explanations that followed newspaper accounts of this case would make it appear that this was an extraordinary exception in that, or other institutions', practice.

Unfortunately this is not the case. My father, E. G. Sandifer, was stricken with a heart attack while at work, a few doors from the George Washington University Hospital. His friends naturally took him there. He was not in any sense a charity case, but a seriously sick person, needing immediate medical attention.

This hospital, George Washington, permitted him to remain for an indefinite time in their lobby, despite his statement to such attendants as were present that he was dying, without assistance. In desperation he was forced to use his remaining strength to go outside for help, and eventually reached his home, where he died two days afterward. How far this extra drain on his resistance carried him to his death I am not prepared to say. I do know that the explanation given me afterward by the superintendent was far from satisfactory.

From this one experience, and observation of several others besides the more recent occurrence at Gallinger, accounts of which have appeared in print, my own opinion is that what these institutions need, more than public money, is something drastic to change their attitude toward the public to which they are ethically responsible.

Land-Grant Perils.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Presidents and deans of land-grant colleges assembled in Washington for their recent annual meeting were taken for a socialistic ride on November 20 by Relief Administrator Hopkins. Assailing the endowed colleges and universities as refusing to accept students without money, he said that all citizens are entitled to higher education and that if they can not get it any other way, the Government will give it to them.

In true socialistic style and pandering to sectional feeling, he intimated that the "autocracy of wealth in New England" might have harder sledding from now on, thus suggesting that attacks on the "moneyed classes" and privately endowed institutions are part of the Administration's policy. He did not, however, explain that carrying out the present program of the New Deal will soon deprive many endowed institutions, including colleges, hospitals, libraries, museums and the like, of most of their income, seriously handicapping their operations or closing them altogether.

Continued long enough, this policy will also ruin the life insurance companies, scarcely aiding in the development of "the fuller life." Not only did Mr. Hopkins' talk indicate the possible inauguration of a drive against the intelligentsia, but he stated that the FERA is now giving instruction in many towns and cities in America, much of which instruction is rumored to be communistic in general character. That a group of intelligent educators could sit and stomach such drivel is almost beyond comprehension—unless this is a part of a scheme to regiment the land-grant colleges. PONTIFEX.

Washington, Nov. 20.

The Treasury Discharge.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washington readers are becoming quite accustomed to prejudicial reporting of all incidents pertaining to matters of Administration policy and also to Government employes, so it was not very surprising that your Sunday Post of November 18 wrote up the recent examination given to prohibition agents and investigators in such a lame fashion.

Your article lopped off one-fourth of the picture and thus eliminated the costumer, coat and hat upon which the major portion of the questions were based. And only a very few of the questions were published, with answers immediately following. With the result that those reading the poorly assembled data may have thought: "What a dumb bunch not to have passed so simple an examination." It would have seemed better to have assigned the writing of the article to some one who could present the matter completely and intelligently to the public, or to have omitted it entirely.

Fortunately, I am not affected by the McKellar rider since I am an auditor in the Income Tax Unit, but I am the author of the resolution which passed our National Convention of American Federation of Government Employes at New York, directing the national office to make every possible effort to secure remedial legislation for this group of civil service employes who had been so unfairly discriminated against, and to go on record as being unalterably opposed to any legislation which nullified the civil service status of employes who had gained such status through open competitive examinations.

As publicity chairman for the District Department of A. F. G. E. lodges I would appreciate a clear cut, intelligent presentation of the matter if it is to be given any publicity in your paper at all.

Let Children Choose.

Mother knows best about most things, but not necessarily about the books her children should read.

This blunt statement is made in the current issue of the Parents' Magazine. Its author, Josette Frank, makes it as a result of long experience in the Child Study Association; and this experience leads her to lay down a very simple common sense rule about books for children.

No books, she says, is a good book for a child if it fails to interest him. Conversely, if it does interest him it very likely is a good book—for him, although the child next door might not like it at all.

One of our little failings is our easy-going habit of assuming that all children are pretty much alike in their tastes. We don't make that mistake with adults; we are ready enough to admit that one man may like the works of S. S. Van Dine, while his neighbor prefers Sinclair Lewis. But we take it for granted that all children will like the same thing.

Furthermore, we jump to the conclusion that they will like the books we ourselves liked as children. Many a father has actually been horrified to discover that such a book as "Kim" bored his son to distraction, while "Ivanhoe"—which the father himself never could endure—is swallowed whole with great avidity.

As a matter of fact, the parent's responsibility in regard to the books his children read is a good deal less than we sometimes suppose.

About all the father or mother can do is see to it that good books are available to the youngsters. There are many mansions in the realm of literature; provide the children with the key, turn them loose—and let them settle where they choose.

Children are great ones to recognize shams and to detect the second-rate. Ordinarily, a child will instinctively prefer a good book to a poor one.

We do our part when we put the good books before him. If he goes ahead and likes what he chooses to like, instead of what we think he ought to like, there's precious little we can do about it.

It begins to seem that, at long last, a case of grippe may soon be regarded, not as the patient's misfortune, but his fault.

"A pandemic outburst . . . characterized . . . by a rapid course, catarrh of the respiratory tract, pyrexia"—oh, well, "fever," if you prefer—"and some degree" — some degree!—"of prostration."

There's the "provisional definition."

As to the cause? The best known of diseases is still the most mysterious. "As to the causative organism of influenza," says the Encyclopedia Britannica (and you know how encyclopedias hate to admit ignorance), "we remain in doubt."

The Post-Impressionist will not shame the Britannica by telling you the cause of influenza. He will confine himself to the news of its prevention.

It was the late Sir David Bruce who said:

"Find me a suitable animal which can be infected with a disease, and I will give you good hope of prevention—if not of cure."

Sir David ran Malta Fever to its lair and slew it, thus. Now a group of British doctors—an Andrews, a Laidlaw, a Wilson and, of course, a Smith—announce, in that authoritative professional journal the London Lancet, their belief that they have found this "suitable animal" in this little matter of influenza.

They thought they had found one last year. It was the ferret. But the ferret left much to be desired. Now his deficiencies have been supplied by the modest mouse.

A while ago, Paul de Kruif, in an article in the Country Gentleman to which this Column has recently been indebted, told what Laidlaw had been doing for distempered dogs. De Kruif added:

"Time and again, Laidlaw had mulled the curious similarity of human flu and dog distemper. With two other microbe-hunters . . . he infected ferrets with fluid from the throats of people with high flu fevers. These ferrets got very sick, but every one got better, and, once well, they were beautifully proof against another attack of flu!

"You could pass this human sickness through ferret to ferret. And wasn't this a strong gleam of hope? The blood of any ferret, once he'd got better, knocked out completely . . . these human flu microbes!"

Commenting on this same discovery, the London Times pointed out, for the laity, that it demonstrated the prime cause of influenza as "one of the so-called filterable viruses."

But could the immunization be passed along from ferrets to any other animal? That was the question. If it could, it might be passed around a sort of circle—to men.

Science "moves, but slowly, slowly, creeping on from point to point?" Not so very slowly, Lord Tennyson!

Hardly has that De Kruif article been published than, over in London, the mice scamper into the riddle—and unriddle it. Messrs. Laidlaw and companions have succeeded in infecting mice with the virus of influenza from ferrets.

If you care to know how, it's the way you pay taxes: through the nose. Virus which had been "passed through" ferrets was used—both swine and human virus. Unless other micro-organisms are present, the swine virus produces in the pig merely a mild illness; but the pure article gives the mice the real thing.

Sera against the ferret strains of swine and human influenza were concocted. They neutralized the mouse strains.

So, says the Lancet, "the story is complete. It is true that there is detail to fill in, but the outline is drawn with unfaltering strokes."

To this Columnist it occurs that one of the details to be filled in is an answer to the question whether mice can be directly infected from a human being, without, so to put it, the intrusion of the ferret. But that question will doubtless soon be answered also.

Meanwhile, as the London Times says, "it is unnecesary to emphasize the importance of this work . . . Five of the mice received mixtures consisting of the virus and the anti-serum. These animals survived, though they were proved to be susceptible. Other five mice which received the virus died of influenza. Here, therefore, is the basis of a new research the possibilities of which are bright. . . .

"For it must be remembered that, in man, influenza is dangerous chiefly on account of its complications—pneumonia and bronchitis. If the influenza . . . could be prevented, one circumstance . . . favoring pneumonia and bronchitis would be eliminated."

In Samuel Butler's Utopian land of "Erewhon," all illness was considered a crime. Grippe is on its way toward erewhonization.

And please don't tell us, in the words of the hereinbefore mentioned Encyclopedia Britannica, that "grippe is . . . nothing more than a severe cold," whereas "influenza is a highly contagious infection." That may be true of British grippes and British influenzas. But, as good Americans, enemies of caste, we make no distinction between the two diseases.

Japan Reveals Small Increase In Communism

State Socialism May Make Some Advance There, Says Post's Observer.

By David Wills.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)
Tokyo.

JAPAN'S greatest asset is her regimented labor; her greatest difficulties in the future will be with labor problems. At present, labor is cheap and docile. Our ship has just been coaled at Karatsu; 250 men and women scraped the coal into baskets, passed it from hand to hand to the bunkers, and loaded 100 tons in four hours. This is only possible in a country where labor is incredibly cheap.

Yet American labor, which costs a great deal more, is not because of that a liability. As the productive power of a country increases, and the share of labor increases along with that, labor becomes "dearer," and to pay it too little becomes as dangerous to industrial stability as to pay too much. Japan's labor is skillful and productive; it remains cheap because it has been the concern of the country to build up the industrial equipment, roads and railways, army and navy, rather than to develop consumption goods for the mass of the population. The working people have been enjoying something like a Soviet first five-year plan for most of the period since the Restoration.

Before the opening of the country to foreign influences, the laboring people were kept with their noses close to the grindstone. They were exorted by precept to be diligent. Their produce was removed to the owners and rulers by taxation. Agrarian discontent was common, but so complete and severe was the domination over most of the country that protest was futile. The opening of the country came largely as the result of the internal explosion. Merchants were increasing in power and were the only class which had benefited continuously from the introduction of a money economy. The small people hoped for some relief from repression, and followers of the landed lords, who were in the hands of merchants and money lenders, hoped for recuperation in mercantile enterprises.

It was natural that the main result of restoration of the Emperor, abolition of the Shogunate and the industrialization of the country should be the consolidation of the power of the merchant and financial houses, and that the laboring people should merely change masters.

UP to the restoration, clan organization and responsibility of the individual primarily to his own small group prevented the growth of national mindedness or sense of social responsibility. It was merely too much to expect that a country without any experience of democratic parliamentary government could successfully adopt so alien a system.

Significantly, the model of democracy imported was the German, which was more in agreement with the existing aristocratic organization. Every effort was made to build up a national spirit by developing the theory of loyalty to the Emperor. But the sense of social responsibility remained undeveloped, and the Japanese party politics have demonstrated the vices of the system rather more frequently than the virtues. There is constant insurrection of private interests within parties, and the willingness to be bribed seems to be at least as common as in certain political ranks in the United States.

The present government continues the policies of its predecessors, which was formed partly through the agitations of the farmers, who demanded economic relief from financial burdens made unbearable by depression and partly as an expression of the natural aristocratic tendency of the Japanese which has successfully resisted all importations of more democratic systems for the last 2,000 years.

It is inevitable that, as Japanese industrialism continues its growth from its present rather young position, the demand for a more skilled worker and for a higher remuneration for the workers will increase steadily. The signs of increased skill are everywhere evident. The quality of exported staple manufactures and of articles for domestic consumption is improving. It no longer is possible to describe Japanese products as merely "cheap."

• • • •

BEFORE long it is to be expected that Japan will begin to export light machinery. Even in heavy machinery there are certain lines—hydraulic turbines, for example—in which she has great experience, and may do a profitable export trade. But whether the operators of industry are likely easily to grant the greater importance of labor, and whether labor will remain docile and patiently await its increase, are doubtful matters.

In contrast to the farmer, the industrial worker tends more toward Socialism and Communism. There is constant fusing and breaking up of the proletarian political parties, however, and so far there has been little prospect of a united front. Yet the authorities remain extremely nervous with regard to Communist activity. Suppression is severe, and every attempt is made to prevent any importation of "anti-Japanese" thoughts. The press is closely censored on this as on other matters.

Preventive methods of the government include the promotion of "young men's training quarters," with military discipline, the purpose of which is to induce the men to become supporters of the existing form of government, and defenders of the country against radical thought. On the whole, it seems much more probable that economic reorganization will come, not through a Communist revolution, but through some form of State Socialism, with the army as its main supporter.

Wrong, But Thinking

THE more one studies the Agricultural Administration the more one is convinced that it must be its personality that gets it by. Regardless of what it does, how many mistakes it makes, the people say, "But for some reason you can't help liking it."

BARGERON

Only a few days ago there was some pretty serious criticism of the AAA from what might be called an authoritative source. It was in the supplemental report of the President's National Planning Committee, headed by his own uncle, Mr. Frederic Delano. The criticism came from two economists, one of them a Brookings Institution man. The committee emphasized that it did not stand for the supplemental report, but included it in its general findings nevertheless.

The two economists condemned various policies of the AAA, the crop-curtailment business in particular. But, they added admiringly, the AAA boys are the clearest thinkers in town. It would seem to raise a serious question as to what clearest thinking is.

One seldom sees the like of the affection in which the Agricultural planners are held, or for that matter, their own attitude. Nearly everything they do they admit at the outset that it is wrong. They shake their heads sorrowfully and say: "We ought not to do this; it is wrong." And everybody shakes his head along with them. Then the boys go right ahead and do what they had in mind.

Honestly, it is one of the strangest situations we have ever had here in the Nation's Capital. Never did a bunch do things so consistently and persistently wrong, saying right along that they knew they were doing wrong, and yet retain our friendship. It must be that we secretly admire wrongness when one reaches the top in it, when in the midst of all the wrongness that is done he comes to be the champion wrong-doer, the man who reached the height of wrong-doing, so to speak.

• • • •

Even as the Agri boys killed the little pigs. It is not right to destroy voice: "We ought not to kill these little pigs. It is not right to desroy wealth in this way." It was in that state of emotions, one imagines, that they went right ahead killing the little pigs.

One of the most ungrateful tasks ever enforced upon a group of thinkers, we were told, was the administration of the Bankhead cotton bill. Why, the day that bill was brought up to the department, the boys' heads were bowed in the deepest grief. It was like bringing a corpse home to the loved ones. The impression is that those who brought the bill up from Congress walked in with their hats removed and mumbling their condolences, their gruff, man-like voices racked with pain.

"Oh, why did it ever have to happen?" the Agri boys cried. "This is not the solution. This is wrong."

• • • •

But that paradox of their nature comes even more to the fore now. It seems that most of the Senators, members of the House and cotton growers who originally supported the bill, who "forced" it on the "Agri" boys, have come to agree with them that it was wrong.

"Yes, yes," they agree. "It ought to be repealed. It is wrong. But what will we do without it? Oh, oh, oh!"

And when assured that the cotton growers are now against it they say mournfully that that being the case there is no need to have a poll and then decide to have a poll in the hope that maybe the farmers will support it again, after all. Maybe, they will consent to "force" the bill upon the "Agri" boys once more. Not that it is the thing for the farmers to do, say the "Agri" boys gravely, but oh, oh, oh—what are we going to do. America must chose!

They are, indeed, the clearest thinkers in town. Of that, there is not a doubt.

Western Orator Wrote Most Famous of New Deal Definitions.

By Homer H. Gruenther.
(Omaha Daily Tribune Staff Writer.)
Omaha, Nebr.

Nebraska's new Democratic Senator is the man who wrote what President Roosevelt regards as the best definition of the New Deal. Senator-elect Edward R. Burke attracted wide attention last August, when, while campaigning, he gave a definition of the New Deal which was printed in most of the papers of the United States and later was to be quoted by President Roosevelt in his Green Bay, Wis., Nationwide radio talk after his return from his transpacific trip.

Burke is almost a novice in politics as far as professional activity goes. He is not of the oratorical type which transfers an attentive audience into a wildly cheering mass. In fact, in both the primary and election, it was his opponents who got most of the cheers. But Mr. Burke got the votes.

Mr. Burke, however, is an outstanding speaker, and his services are much in demand at important events. He has been selected several times as the Democratic orator on Nation-wide hook-ups. Schooled in a world of business and law, Burke admits that he is a rank amateur in politics, but he had certain ideas regarding the conduct of a candidate for United States Senator.

• • • •

IN 1930 Burke was defeated for Congress by only a few hundred votes. Not until 1932, when he was successful in his quest for a Congressional seat, did he achieve more than local prominence. He was well known in the State educational and legal circles, but this was about the extent of the general knowledge of his abilities. However, in Omaha, he was one of the city's outstanding citizens, mainly because of his standing in his profession and the services he rendered as president of the Omaha school board for four years without compensation.

Burke demonstrated that he had the courage necessary for a successful political career when he filed for the Senate this year against Gov. Charles W. Bryan. Burke was practically sure of retaining his House seat, while on the other hand, Bryan, who was three times Nebraska's Governor and Democratic candidate for vice president in 1924, was generally considered as the most powerful figure in Nebraska's Democratic circles. However, Burke plunged headlong into a sure battle-royal by filing against Bryan for the Democratic nomination.

An incident back in 1930 was to play an important part in this year's campaign. In 1930 Gov. Bryan induced the late former Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock to file for the United States Senate against Senator Norris. Bryan at the time was running for Governor and he needed a strong running mate along with the support of Hitchcock's powerful Omaha World-Herald. Against the advice of all of his friends Hitchcock heeded Bryan's suggestion and was badly defeated. But, through the support which Hitchcock pulled for him, Bryan squeezed out a victory by some three thousand votes. Bryan was to repeat this victory in '32—thanks to the Roosevelt landslide.

In 1933, when Senator R. B. Howell died, Senator Hitchcock and his friends expected Gov. Bryan to appoint his running mate of 1930 as United States Senator. Instead, Bryan appointed W. H. Thompson, an 82-year-old party stalwart of Grand Island. This was a blow to the Hitchcock forces for which there was no redress. Although Senator Hitchcock died early this year, his friends continued bitter. If Bryan had appointed Hitchcock, Hitchcock's friends would have supported Bryan this year and with a Bryan-Hitchcock-Mullen hook-up there would have been no defeating Bryan either in the primary or in the election.

• • • •

ARTHUR MULLEN, former national committee man from Nebraska and Roosevelt floor manager in 1932, who was a bosom life-long friend of Hitchcock's, pleaded with Bryan to appoint Hitchcock Senator. Mullen later promised Bryan that if he failed to appoint Hitchcock he (Mullen) would do everything he could to see that Bryan would never again be elected to office in Nebraska.

So when Burke filed, the friends of Hitchcock and Mullen combined their forces with those of Burke's friends and Bryan's enemies and marched to a clear-cut victory.

The campaign became bitter. Bryan attacked Mullen by charging that the President forced Mullen to resign as national committeeman. Mullen finally returned to Nebraska. He and Bryan engaged in some spirited controversies, much to the pleasure of Nebraska in general.

Meanwhile Burke, in company with Mrs. Burke, traveled over the State with a loud speaker wagon making ten talks daily.

It was while compiling some new data for his campaign speeches that Burke developed his definition of the New Deal, which follows:

The New Deal is an old deal—as old as the earliest aspirations of humanity and liberty and justice and the good life. It is old as Christian ethics, for basically its ethics are the same. It is new as the Declaration of Independence was new, and the Constitution of the United States. Its motives are the same; it voices the deathless cry of good men and good women for the opportunity to live and work in freedom, the right to be secure in their homes and in the fruits of their labor, the power to protect themselves against the ruthless and the cunning. It recognizes that man is indeed his brother's keeper, insists that the laborer is worthy of his hire, demands that justice shall rule the mighty as well as the weak.

"This," said President Roosevelt a few days later, when he quoted Burke's idea of the New Deal, "is the definition given by a friend of mine in Congress. Keep that vision before your eyes and in your hearts; it can and will prevail." Burke's followers and the press quickly picked up his definition and publicized it all over the Nation.

• • • •

ROBERT SIMMONS, outstanding critic of the New Deal program, received the Republican nomination, and scarcely was the primary battle over when Burke hurled a challenge to Simmons for a series of debates on the New Deal issue.

Burke's friends tried every way to stop the debates, because they felt the contest would only draw crowds for Mr. Simmons. Simmons, however, accepted the challenge, and Burke insisted proper arrangements be made. As a result his subsequent victory was as clean-cut a New Deal victory as any of the Senatorial contests.

Burke's one hobby is golfing, much to the displeasure of his campaign managers, because the candidate was forever ready to defend his honor on the golf course.

Burke is not given to radical tendencies, although a pronounced "liberal." He has a profound admiration for President Roosevelt and in the main is expected to follow the President's program. He is a noted friend of education. From 1926 to 1930 he was president of the Omaha school board.

Burke was born 52 years ago at Running Water, S. D. He worked his way through Beloit College and later Harvard Law School, where he was graduated with honors. He served as a commissioned officer during the war, is a Legionnaire, and voted against the bonus last year. He has two daughters, Beatrice, who was graduated from Northwestern University last year, and Barbara, who is a student at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis. He is a Congregationalist, smokes a pipe, and believes that people should be allowed to drink moderately if they wish.

Night Of Love

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE only insipid thing in this entire picture is its title; and I hope it will not prevent intelligent people from seeing it. It is a beautiful work of art and the interest is so steadily maintained that there is not a moment when the attention wanders. Furthermore, the beautiful singing of Grace Moore is as pure and flawless in tone as if she were singing in person; there is not a trace of the metallic sound one sometimes hears in picture-conversations.

• • • •

What a miracle! Great singers need no longer dread the approach of age or the loss of voice. By means of the picture, their youth, beauty, charm and freshness of voice can be preserved forever.

I am not ashamed to say that I was profoundly affected by this movie; indeed, I was overcome by emotion. At the piano Grace Moore sings "The Last Rose of Summer." And although everyone knows the tune, nine out of ten persons know only the first line of the poem. Thomas Moore was a sentimental poet, but he understood the art of melody in verse, and I think my readers will be glad to have the whole poem.

• • • •

'Tis the last rose of summer,
All her lovely companions
Are faded and gone;
No flower of her kindred,
No rose-bud is nigh,
To reflect back her blushes,
Or give sigh for sigh.

I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
To pine on the stem;
Since the lovely are sleeping,
Go, sleep thou with them.
Thus kindly I scatter
Thy leaves o'er the bed,
Where the mates of the garden
Lie scentless and dead.

So soon may I follow,
When friendships decay,
And from Love's shining circle
The gems drop away.
When true hearts lie withered,
And fond ones are flown,
Oh, who would inhabit
This bleak world alone?

New Deal Bandwagon Has Need of Critics

Brains Wanted, Not Lip Service, in Cooperation on Riddles of Recovery.

By Elliott Thurston.

TOO many the postures and attitudes now being assumed toward the New Deal by some leaders in and out of politics are amusing or irritating. Undoubtedly the motives in many cases are less than admirable. The bandwagon spirit is all too evident. Some captains of industry lost no time in congratulating Mr. Roosevelt on the election, though the White House was well aware that the outcome was thoroughly distasteful to the authors of these felicitations.

Likewise, it is undoubtedly true that among those business and banking groups which have seen the political handwriting on the wall there are some who are wholly insincere in their current protestations of a newly discovered fealty to the President. Yet there are a number of leaders in the business and banking world who can not fairly be charged with hypocrisy or with surrendering their souls in adopting a more conciliatory tone.

It is true that they need the New Deal, that the only present prospect for salvation lies in working with and not against the New Deal. It is also true that the New Deal needs them fully as much as they need the New Deal. Both sides stand to gain, not to lose, by seeking solution of problems, which have yet to be solved, in a far more moderate spirit of common understanding than has prevailed in the past, or ever does prevail in the surcharged atmosphere of political controversy.

The fact is that political opposition has been reduced to an unprecedented extremity for a free country. Never before in American history has such a condition existed. Even Washington enjoyed no such absence of opposing forces able to make their will effective. Accordingly there is no real choice before business and banking groups but to try to cooperate with an Administration which is in all probability secure in office for the next six years.

• • • •

THIS does not mean that the New Deal is to go unchallenged and uncriticized. Nothing could be more fatal from the standpoint of the New Deal itself than to have free, intelligent criticism stifled. Mr. Roosevelt knows that and has said as much to some of his advisers. It does mean, however, that in the absence of the usual means for expressing criticism and dissent, new mediums are necessary.

Since there is no effective opposition in Congress, channels must be found outside for expressing a public opinion that is at the moment politically voiceless. The Liberty League originated from some such conception. Whether it can be effective or not, whether it is detrimentally stamped in the public mind with unpopular labels, can not change the fact that there ought to be avenues through which a large, responsible body of opinion can make itself heard.

For this reason, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and other organizations representative of business or banking or labor, have a greater responsibility than ever to bring their best intelligence to bear upon solution of the tremendous economic and social problems which remain unsolved. Where these groups were able in the past to make their appeals to and bring pressure to bear upon Congress, they must now appeal to a larger, wider public opinion. The appeal can no longer be to politics alone. And from some standpoints, this seems a good thing.

IF SOLUTIONS, or at least remedies, can be tested in the light of general rather than partisan or class results, so much the better. In theory, and perhaps in practice, it should now be possible to have class and group interests reconciled on a more reasonable, rational basis than a test of political strength. Certainly the validity of any proposal ought to be tested by whether it is in the general interest; not by whether it can command a majority of votes which too often are open to demagogic command, or other forms of seduction.

The approach to such solutions has to be on a level above partisan competition. It is both the strength and weakness of the New Deal that unless it can produce recovery which will be to the general good it will be doomed politically. If the New Deal could survive merely by blaming the sins and sinners of the past, by temporizing and stalling, then it could confine itself to playing politics. Fortunately for the country, the New Deal must make good on recovery, which is not a political matter. And it needs the best critical brains it can find everywhere to do the job.

On this basis, cooperation with the New Deal is both possible and essential. Cooperation is not possible when either side reverts to politics, or abandons honest convictions. There may be some who are playing up to the New Deal out of fear or narrow expediency. But they are not helping themselves, or the New Deal, or the country.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

WOULD you call Eugene O'Neill a pessimist? Writes Sophus Keith Winther in "Eugene O'Neill: A Critical Study" (Random House, $2): "He is a pessimist who loves life; one whose love goes so deep that he can not remain supine and unmoved by its present failure blocking its potential happiness. He loves life well enough to condemn those who shun it in fear and trembling, and to urge those who can face its reality to make the most of it."

The passage, alone, seems a bit purple. But Mr. Winther, professor of English at the University of Washington, builds up to it carefully. He examines every single one of O'Neill's plays, weighs them as explanations of the conflicts of our time, comes roundly and soundly to his conclusions. You will find it an invigorating book, outright in its attack on O'Neill's adverse critics and outright in its affirmation of O'Neill's stature as a spokesman and critic.

Nothing shows the need for this study better than the fact that many people still think of O'Neill by counting up the murders and neurotic characters in his plays. Such people can not see the forest for the trees, as Mr. Winther spends scant gentleness in pointing out.

"Complacency never forsakes Roistering Regency Rakes!"—sings a quartette in Noel Coward's little dish of froth, the hit of London's past season: "Conversation Piece" (Doubleday, Doran, $1.75). Brighton a hundred years ago is the pastel-tinted backdrop, before which rakes roister, the beau monde parades, and a decayed French aristocrat tries to turn a penny by marrying off his impromptu ward, a lovely chit from a French cabaret, to a wealthy marquis. The play is full of color and song, which you'll have to imagine from Mr. Coward's slight but amusing pages.

Schools Urged To Train Pupils For Local Rule

Arlington Speaker Tells Women Voters This Should Be Aim.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

The problems confronting the women of Arlington County are similar to those in both Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md., declared Miss Lavinia Engle, member of the Maryland House of Delegates, speaking before the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County yesterday afternoon.

These three counties are what might be termed the big sisters of the Federal City and, with no hopes of ever becoming an actual part of the District of Columbia, the many problems must be worked out by the citizens of each separate section, Miss Engle said.

She urged a broader study of local government in public schools so that the pupils, when they step into the places of those who today are operating the local governments, will be better able to cope with the situation.

Mrs. Jessie Roberts was reelected president. Other officers elected were Mrs. Edith Simpson, vice president; Mrs. Edith Rose, recording secretary; Miss Virginia Green, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Mary Williams, treasurer; Mrs. Florence E. Cannon, parliamentarian, and Mrs. Ruth Lowell, registrar.

The membership committee consists of Mrs. Ruth Marcey, Mrs. Tillie Ahalt, Mrs. Louise Payne, Mrs. Anna Green and Mrs. Martha Hulbert.

The following committees were appointed by the president: Budget, Mrs. Cora Miles, chairman; Mrs. Ruth Lowell and Mrs. Olive Odam; parks and playgrounds, Mrs. Pearle W. Sharpe, chairman; Mrs. Mae Jacobs and Mrs. Helen Orr.

Mrs. Cannon, delegate to the Arlington County Civic Federation gave a comprehensive report of the activities of that body at its October and November meetings.

A movement was launched by the Lyon Park Citizens Association at its meeting last night to reduce the terms of members of the county board from four to two years. While no definite decision on the proposal was reached, President A. D. Adams announced the appointment of a special committee of which C. M. Johnston is the chairman, to make a study of the subject and report at the December meeting.

The association requested that the county board confer upon County Manager Roy S. Braden full powers to handle all administrative matters concerning county business and urged the board to confine its activities to matters of policy.

Braden's administration was praised as "honest, efficient and businesslike." Appointed members of the board were reminded that they are servants and agents of the whole people of Arlington County and not accountable to any individuals for their actions.

There will be a special meeting of the executive committee of the Arlington County Chapter, American Red Cross, tomorrow night in the Clarendon Health Center.

As their contribution to the relief fund being raised by the Arlington County Welfare, Arlington Post, No. 139, American Legion, beginning tonight and continuing through Saturday night will stage a bingo party. The event will be held in the Hedrick Building, opposite the Clarendon Trust Co., in Clarendon. The entire proceeds for the three nights will be turned over to the welfare board. Chickens and turkeys will be the prizes.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the Henry Clay School at Lyon Park will hold a benefit bake sale tomorrow from 2 to 4 p. m. at the schoolhouse.

Advantages of the adjustment of agriculture as brought about by the Government through the AAA was the subject of a discussion by John Gannaway at the monthly meeting of the Men's Club of the Community Methodist Church in Aurora Heights last night.

Pioneer Grange, of Masonville, last night discussed the proposed consolidation of counties in Virginia as a means of increasing governmental efficiency and decreasing taxes. The move was supported by H. M. Gaston and opposed by Martin Webb. The latter urged that while consolidation would undoubtedly be beneficial to many sparsely populated counties, Fairfax would stand to lose by consolidation with Arlington County and would make no appreciable saving by joining with Prince William County.

C. H. Carrico announced that the new officers' chairs will be delivered to the grange hall prior to next Tuesday night when Pioneer Grange is to be host to the Fairfax County Pomona Grange.

Marlin Robey was named chairman of the square dance to be held Thanksgiving eve. Mrs. Milton Hartley, Mrs. C. H. Carrico and Mrs. Mabel Crandall were appointed to pack several baskets of food for poor families for Thanksgiving, members to bring donations to the dance next Wednesday.

Charles R. Fenwick has been appointed chairman of a club committee to draft an ordinance which the club will request the council to adopt, permitting amateur boxing exhibitions in the corporation. Fenwick is a member of the Virginia State Boxing Commission. He was formerly football coach at the University of Virginia and University of Maryland, and while a student at the University of Virginia held the heavyweight boxing championship of the Southern Conference colleges for two years. Dr. C. F. Kincheloe, of Falls Church, also a former heavyweight boxer at the University of Virginia, will also act as coach. Instruction in boxing is to be given club members from 7 to 8 o'clock each night the club uses the gymnasium.

Allen Orders Showdown on Parole Board

Backs Donovan Release.

Explaining the occasional parole of so-called "hardened" prisoners, the board states its refusal to believe that any man's case is completely hopeless. Proof of Donovan's rehabilitation was very strong, as he made no attempt to escape while a trusty, and managed a chicken farm a considerable distance from the reformatory. "He lived almost as a free man and did not violate his trust."

Even so, the parole was not granted until a plan had been worked out for Donovan to live and work on a farm in Indiana, owned by a personal friend of Capt. Barnard. Donovan's previous criminal history was carefully studied again before the release was made, says the statement. Donovan will not be allowed to go more than 20 miles from the farm without becoming a parole violator, and the statement further points out that, leaving unaccompanied, Donovan went directly and immediately to Leavenworth.

The statement concludes with "regret at the distortion of the facts," and promises the public that "no prisoners will be released at any time without a parole plan that will give the public complete protection."

Dispute in Cabinet Denied by Flandin

Paris, Nov. 21 (U.P.).—A "whispering campaign," centered around the Levy Bank scandal and directed against the Flandin cabinet, continued to unsettle the bourse today and brought a denial of dissension from the premier himself.

"Complete agreement exists within the cabinet," Premier Pierre Etienne-Flandin said in response to rumors of differences between the ministers of justice and interior over the Levy case. "There is no discord whatever."

The Levy case, which in some quarters has been likened to the Stavisky affair, first came to light early this month. The amount involved was said at that time to be 100,000,000 francs (about $6,600,000).

Report Fixes Producer Loss In Capital Milk

Agriculture Department Upholds Cost Estimate of Association.

Producers of milk for the Washington market are losing an average of 6.7 cents per gallon under present costs of production, it was declared in a revised report on production costs submitted by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association and made public yesterday by Elwood Seal, assistant corporation counsel.

The cost estimates of the producers had been referred by Seal to Department of Agriculture experts for checking.

"We wish to state that the cost of production studies involving as they do a large number of estimates can be only approximate," C. L. Holmes, in charge of the division of farm management and costs, said in his report.

"We feel that on the whole the cost calculations of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association are reasonable and dependable, with the exceptions set forth," the department division chief added.

Cost Estimated at $3.50.

The producers had estimated it cost $3.50 per 100 pounds to produce milk for the District. This sum was reduced by 29 cents by Agriculture Department experts, but the latter allowed an additional 40 cents for increased feed costs, bringing the total estimated cost to $3.61 per 100 pounds, or 30.99 cents per gallon.

Washington has the highest quality milk supply of any city, it was said. Grade A requirements for most cities in the United States require a maximum count of from 100,000 to 200,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter.

The majority of Washington milk as delivered to dealers has 10,000 or less bacteria, which equals the bacterial requirements for certified milk.

Milk Here Best in U. S.

The District Health Department has developed the best supply of milk to be found anywhere within the United States, the report stated. Producers within the milk shed have "willingly spent many millions of dollars in equipping their farms to supply increasingly high quality milk," the report of the producers said, adding:

"It would, therefore, seem necessary that the consuming public of Washington continue to support the farms producing milk for Washington in order that Washington may continue to enjoy its excellent supply of milk."

The cost of production conclusions of the Department of Agriculture experts were a marked victory for the producers, who are seeking to bring about an increase in the price of milk which would amount to at least 1 cent a bottle to the consumer.

Pneumonia Fatal To Dr. De Sitter, 62

Scientist Who Worked With Einstein Dies in Holland.

Amsterdam, Nov. 21 (AP).—Dr. William de Sitter, 62, noted professor of astronomy of Leyden University, died today of pneumonia.

Dr. De Sitter collaborated with Prof. Albert Einstein in the winter of 1931-32 at the Mount Wilson observatory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, in studies concerning their two separate schools of thought on the structure of the universe.

On March 22, 1932, they issued a joint statement "on the relation between the expansion and the mean density of the universe." The two scientists said the curvature of the three-dimensional space may be positive, negative or zero.

Rum Charge Holds Brother of Crooner

San Francisco, Nov. 21 (AP).—Albert Colombo, brother of the radio and moving picture singer, Russ Colombo, who was accidentally shot and killed several months ago, was arrested in his liquor store here today on a Federal indictment charging conspiracy to violate internal revenue laws.

"I don't know what this is all about," Colombo said. "I have been shipping liquor extensively, but have paid taxes on every drop of it."

G Street Tailor Awarded Sizable Contract for Third Year.

Any normal tailor might be expected to swallow his pins if he received an order for two pairs of blue broadcloth pants with an outside seam measurement of twice the height of the Washington Monument.

Harold L. Hines, G street tailor, has received the approximate equivalent of such an order and still is quite articulate. In fact, he has received the order three times. His bid for the new high school cadet uniforms recently won him the contract to outfit the corps for the third year. He has orders for 307 uniforms and over 400 hats.

To start with, this means ordering approximately three acres of material—1,473 square yards. Then he must have 1,535 feet of gold and blue braid, 1,842 small gold buttons, 1,228 large gold buttons and 741 feet of white belt webbing, not to mention hundreds of cross-guns and shields of varying sizes to complete the regulation dress.

And the hats—averaging size 7, or 22 inches—if all the material were used for one enormous visored headpiece, it would fit—well, name your own comparison: it would be 73 feet around the sweat band.

Each cadet must be measured and the sizes range from a six-foot-six Roosevelt officer with a 37-inch inseam leg measurement to a four-foot-ten Western private. The complete uniforms, with hats, cost the rank-and-file $19.45, while the officers, who wear Sam Brown belts and sundry other extra items, pay $21.95.

Further figuring revealed that if the bolts of broadcloth needed for all the trousers were unrolled they would cover a swath 1.6 yards wide farther than even Jimmy Thompson, the Australian giant, could drive a golf ball—383 yards. The material for the blouses would extend even farther, 537 yards, something more than a quarter of a mile.

And remember, this is for only 307 uniforms. There are 1,800 cadets in the District regiments, but many already have their uniforms from previous service, while a few have obtained second-hand equipment.

Six Submarines Named by Navy

Policy of Giving Numbers to Craft Abandoned.

Six submarines being constructed under provisions of the Vinson Bill as part of the 1934 naval program have been assigned names, it was stated at the Navy Department yesterday by Secretary Swanson.

Formerly designated merely by numbers ranging from 176 to 181, the under-sea craft now will be called: Plunger, Pinna, Pollack, Perch, Pickerel and Pompano.

Five of the names selected were chosen in accordance with the Navy's policy of designating fleet submarines for inhabitants of the sea. The sixth, Plunger, bears the same name as the Navy's first submarine, a ship that was never completed. The first Plunger was partially constructed in 1893. But while she was being finished new designs were completed so rapidly that it was found necessary to abandon her.

Still another Plunger was built in 1900. Only 63 feet long, she was transported to the Philippines on a steamer's deck. She saw service during the World War but was stricken from the Navy list in 1922.

Huey Long and Wife Leave on 'Honeymoon'

New Orleans, Nov. 21 (AP).—Huey Long left New Orleans today by motor car on his "delayed honeymoon trip" for an unannounced destination. The Senator slipped out of his hotel suite, met Mrs. Long, his bride of 21 years ago, and drove the car out of town with Mrs. Long beside him.

Though Long kept the plans for his trip strictly secret, it was reported that he was going to Hot Springs, Ark., where Gov. O. K. Allen, Long's political ally, and Mrs. Allen recently spent their vacation.

Girl's Damage Suit Settled by County

Martha Geesling Awarded $2,500 for Injuries.

Settlement out of court of the $50,000 damage suit of Martha Geesling, a minor, against the county commissioners of Prince Georges County, Md., yesterday brought the three-day trial of the case before a jury in Montgomery County circuit court at Rockville, Md., to an abrupt end.

The plaintiff, through her best friend, Mrs. Minnie Seebold, accepted a settlement of $2,500, the court was informed.

The girl was injured about five years ago when a bank at the side of the road near her home in Seat Pleasant caved in and buried her. She was permanently injured, it was claimed.

Recount Pleas Of 2 Candidates Put Up to Court

Diamond and Chinn Allege Irregularities of Vote in Montgomery.

Chief Judge Hammond Urner last night was studying the petitions for recount filed yesterday in Montgomery County Circuit Court, at Rockville, Md., by John B. Diamond and Raleigh S. Chinn.

The petitions ask for recount of the vote cast in the November 6 Montgomery County election in the first and second commissioner district races, in which Diamond was defeated by 89 votes by Charles E. King, Fusionist, and Chinn by 203 votes by Frank H. Karn, Fusionist, according to the official tabulation.

The petitions allege numerous irregularities in the conduct of this election and the tabulation of the votes in the various voting precincts of the county.

Copies Taken to Annapolis.

Immediately after the petitions were filed in the office of Clayton K. Watkins, clerk of the Montgomery County Circuit Court, Capt. Joseph C. Cissel, of the law firm of Whiteford and Cissel, counsel for the two Democratic candidates, took copies to Judge Urner at Annapolis where he is sitting with the Maryland Court of Appeals.

Judge Urner did not indicate when he would be prepared to set a date for the hearing on the petitions or other action. It may be several days before he can find time from his duties on the Appeals Court bench to act on the county pleas.

It is understood that several other unsuccessful candidates, both Fusion and Democrats, are considering asking recounts, but none has definitely committed himself.

Control of Board at Stake.

The recent election resulted in capture of three places on the county commission board by Fusion candidates, giving them control of the board and its resultant patronage, according to official returns.

Election of Diamond or Chinn to the board would switch control to the Democrats and make safe the jobs of several hundred employes who are under Democratic patronage.

In the meantime, Fusion leaders have gone ahead with plans for distribution of the "spoils" of the election. A meeting of the 13 Progressive Democratic chairmen of the county in Rockville appointed a subcommittee to arrange with Walter W. Dawson, chairman of the Republican State central committee, for apportionment of the Progressive faction's share in the patronage.

Patronage Split Hinted.

This committee includes Robert M. Williams, chairman; William L. Aud, George F. Bonifant, Charles C. Jones, P. Ray Souder, Edwin Codswise and Clay Plummer. It was intimated that a preelection agreement had provided for a 50-50 split on the patronage for the Republican and Progressive Democratic factions of the Fusion Party.

Fusion leaders said they had no immediate plans in their effort to force Gov. Albert C. Aitchie to make immediate issue of commissions for the successful Fusion candidates since it is believed the commissions will be issued the latter part of the week, anyhow.

The petitions filed yesterday alleged that election judges in various precincts had counted ballots for King and Karn which were in fact illegal and had failed to count legal ballots for Diamond and Chinn.

They further alleged that ballots had been counted for King and Karn in some 200 instances where voters had voted for six commissioners instead of five and in which case all votes for county commissioners should have been voided.

Irregularities Charged.

Election clerks in the Darnestown district were alleged to have taken four ballots fro mthe voting place to persons in the town, had them marked, returned to the election judges and placed in the ballot box, where they were counted with other ballots legally cast. The petitions also charge that judges in the same precinct had refused to permit voters to the booths to re fold ballots held improperly folded by the judges, and that seven ballots which had been given to the election judge in charge of the ballot box had been placed on top and had not been counted. They further charged that the K to Z side of the voting place showed that 368 persons voted, but that 381 ballots were shown to have been cast by the tally sheets of the judges.

A Rockville election judge had refused to sign the tally sheet for his precinct, the second, and had told the board of election supervisors that a number of ballots had been counted which, "according to my judgment," had very distinct identification marks," the petitions carged.

Officials Are Accused.

Election officials who were supposed to be representing the Democratic Party actually were members of the Fusion Party and three of the election officials actually had signed the Fusion petition and certified their intention of supporting that party and its candidates, the petition stated, namng the three persons.

The petitions further charge that election judges in the Laytonsville District themselves marked ballots on which the marks were so defective that it was not ascertainable which candidates the voter had intended voting for and that the Republican judge in the Clarksburg District real all of the ballots and refused to permit the Democratic judge or the watchers of either party to see the marking on the ballots and whether they were properly called.

The petitions ask only for a recount in 20 of the 32 precincts of the county, not asking for a recount in the first, second, fourth and fifth precincts of the Bethesda District and the second to ninth inclusive precincts of the Wheaton District.

The petitioners state they are ready to post bond to cover costs of the recount if they are not successfully-f-Precinct

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

T. C. Williams, superintendent of Alexandria public schools, has announced that an order has been received from J. L. Buck, State director of the emergency educational program, directing that all those not actually on relief rolls in classes in the two Alexandria opportunity schools for beginners in typing, shorthand, bookkeeping and accounting, must be dropped from these classes in adult schools using Federal funds for payment of teachers. The order became effective November 15, but Superintendent Williams has been endeavoring to have it rescinded, without success. Camparatively few pupils in the Alexandria schools are affected, it is understood.

"Beginners" are defined as those who have not had previous wage-earning experience in these fields, nor any school training in them. A pupil in typing, for instance, who has either worked as a typist for wages, or has had any school training whatever in typing, would not be classed as a beginner, and would be allowed to remain in the typing class. This experience in typing, however, would not entitle that person to follow studies in any other fields, unless qualified for them in a similar way.

The men of the parish of St. Paul's Episcopal Church will serve a dinner this evening between the hours of 6 and 8 o'clock, the proceeds to go to Section B for missionary work.

Brig. Gen. Edgar Warfield, the oldest Confederate veteran in Alexandria, and the oldest druggest in the United States, is a patient in Alexandria Hospital, where he has been ill for several days. Gen. Warfield is the sole survivor of the 700 men who left Alexandria on May 24, 1861, to join the Confederate forces.

D. C. Book, chairman of the campaign to raise funds for the work of the Alexandria United Charities, announeed yesterday that owing to a misunderstanding the funds given by Alexandrians working in Washington, through the Community Chest, will not be received by the local body for the help of the needy in this city. This will lessen the amount collected for Alexandria and curtail the relief work of the local organization.

Local contributions have reached a total of $7.225, with a number of special donations received yesterday.

Judge McC. Trippe, supreme orator, and C. B. Conner, grand regent, of the Royal Arcanum, will address the members of Alexandria Council, No. 627, Royal Arcanum, at the meeting to be held next Tuesday night in the Junior Hall, 117 North Pitt street.

The Alexandria Kiwanis Club will feature talks by local business men at its weekly luncheon meeting at 12:30 o'clock today in the Virginia room of the George Mason Hotel.

Norman L. Williamson, assistant postmaster; Robert M. Colvin, superintendent of Potomac Yards; John S. Dunn, manager of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Virginia, and J. Frank Myers, assistant to the division manager of the Virginia Public Service Co., all members of the club, will give short talks on their respective organizations.

The play, "Girl Shy," presented last week by the senior class of the Alexandria High School, under the direction of Miss Nora Hossley, Miss Charlene Kiracofe and Miss Margaret Yates, in Maury School auditorium for the benefit of school activities, will be repeated tomorrow night, as over 200 were turned away. Miss Louise Dinwiddie, school librarian, is in charge of the publicity for the presentation.

County Revises Bus Regulation

Scholo Officials in Prince Georges Act After Girl Is Injured.

As a result of a recent auto accident near Upper Marlboro, in which an 8-year-old school girl was seriously injured after alighting from a bus, Prince Georges County school officials yesterday announced a change in -transportation regulations.

Following "regulation No. 9," Gladys Moore, of Upper Marlboro, last Thursday attempted to cross the Crain highway after the school bus, from which she had alighted, had started on. She was struck by an auto and is in a serious condition in Providence Hospital.

A mimeographed letter yesterday was sent by Nicholas Orem, county superintendent, to all school principals and bus drivers. It reads:

"It appears that the only way to avoid such accidents as this is to change regulation No. 9 to read: 'Children should be required to cross the road in front of the bus before it moves on, doing so only on signal of the driver or patrol boy that the road is clear.'

"At Oxon Hill (Md.) School the principal maintains a system of patrol boys on each bus that is a model of efficiency and worthy of inmitation."

Acting Slump

Fawcett Says a Decline Came With Talkies.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 21 (AP). George Fawcett, 73-year-old actor who has played in a number of movies since the days he acted with Maude Adams, expressed regret at their disservice to acting.

Really competent acting no longer is necessary, he said, remarking that "the talkies have got us," but that ability of a director to have a scene done over and over until he obtained exactly the desired effect did away with the necessity for seasoned actors.

Here for an address tonight, Mr. Fawcett recalled the days back before 1879 when he was a student here and played on the varsity baseball team for four years, serving two seasons as captain.

Liquor Board's Ousting Asked At Kensington

Want Commissioners to Take Over Control Powers.

Abolition of the county liquor control board and its counsel and transfer of the authority to the county commissioners was urged in resolutions adopted last night by the Kensington (Md.) Chamber of Commerce. The chamber also urged transfer of appeals from the liquor board to the circuit court, instead of to the State board.

Insurance benefits for volunteer firemen and legislation to provide for semiannual payment of taxes also were indorsed.

Resolutions asking the county commissioners not to discharge county employes now employed, to bar them from any form of political activity, and providing for a civil service system for the county, were presented by George C. Shinn.

Dr. J. W. Bird, chairman of the Social Service League, spoke on the activities of the league and urged those who are employed in Washington to support the Social Service League instead of the Washington Community Chest. Eugene B. Raney, Kensington fire chief, told the chamber he had heard efforts are being made in Baltimore to have the PWA allotment for the Kensington overpass transferred to Baltimore and urged action to avoid loss of the allotment.

Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of the American University, spoke on "America's Fears." He defended the present form of government as opposed to a dictatorship and indorsed the emergency principles of the New Deal.

E. W. Shepard, chairman of the transportation committee, reported progess on efforts to obtain better bus facilities.

CulpeperCan'tVote On Liquor Till 1937

Judge Denies Petition for Referendum This Year.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 21. (AP).—By a decision in Judge Alexander F. Browning's circuit court here today, no liquor election will be held in Culpeper until 1937. The order followed the filing of a petition for a liquor referendum under the Virginia control law, signed by 201 voters.

The judge, in his ruling, cited provisions of the control act which specify that a referendum shall not be held in a year in which a Commonwealth's attorney, commissioner of revenue or treasurer is elected.

Welles Praises Students' Fight Against Reds

Assistant Secretary of State Delivers Address at Maryland U.

Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State and former Ambassador to Cuba, yesterday praised the stand taken by Joseph E. Elvove, University of Maryland student, against the recent student "anti-war" conference in Baltimore.

Speaking before a student gathering at the University of Maryland, he pointed out that certain alien-inclined organizatons have been, in the last several years, attempting to gain a foothold in the student life of the Nation. Welles said:

"When the students of this university (referring to the delegation that attended the Baltimore conference) stood out as I believe they did for those basic elements on which the United States has been built, against weak, wishy-washy and nonthinking groups for which that gathering stood, it made me proud that I was a resident of Maryland."

Delegates at Conference.

Elvove, who attended the conference at Johns Hopkins University last November 10 in company with Warren Tydings, president of the Student Government Association, and Paul Welsh, delivered a speech which he said expressed the sentiment of the Maryland University student body.

He denounced the conference as "communistic, anti-American, and alien-inspired." He told the gathering that the University of Maryland student body would in no way indorse the policies they professed. The National Student League and the League for Industrial Democracy, sponsors of the conference, he described as "communistic."

The speech, which gained recognition from the press in almost every section of the country, drew scores letters of approval from patriotic organizations and individuals.

Threats Received.

Threats, allegedly from communistic organizations and sympathizers, have also been made against Elvove, though few letters disapproving his action have been received at the university.

Welles' speech yesterday was sponsored jointly by the University Democratic Club, of which Paul Welsh is president, and the committee on outside lectures. The meeting was held in the engineering building auditorium.

In addition to voicing his praise of the university's anticonference stand, Welles related at length America's position in regard to her Latin American possessions and policies.

Great Britain To Offer India Self-Rule Plan

Federation of 13 Self-Governing Units Is Proposed in Report.

London, Nov. 21 (AP).—The national government moved today to cut ancient India, hotbed of discontent, partly free from Great Britain's apron strings.

A modified form of self-rule for the homeland of the Mahatma Gandhi was proposed to the new Parliament in recommendations submitted by its joint select committee, whose 30 months of intensive investigation culminated seven years' study of the best way to reorganize the government of India.

Presentation of the report, which is expected to preface many months of bitter parliamentary debate, was followed immediately by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald's motion that the House of Commons reserve full time at this session to the government. This, he explained, was because of the heavy legislative program, of which the chief item is the India bill.

New Provinces Proposed.

The report presented today, which is expected to form the basis of Government-introduced legislation shortly after Christmas, proposed an all-India federation of self-governing units, with 11 provinces of British India, two of them new, linked with native states in the Federal system.

A governor-general, or viceroy, would head the Federal Government. To him, in order to prevent political, economic and financial disturbances, would be reserved such vital safeguards as power over questions of defense and external relations.

The report also recommended that Burma be given its own government and constitution similar to those bestowed on the autonomous states of the federation. Each province would have its own legislative assembly chosen by direct vote, while five—Madras, Bombay, Bengal and the United Provinces of Behar—would have legislatures consisting of two houses. The two new provinces would be Sind and Orissa. The central legislature of the federation would have two chambers, their members elected by indirect vote of the provinces and representatives nominated by the self-ruling native states.

An alternative report presented by dissenting labor members of the committee of 31 urged that the new Indian constitution be so framed as to enable India to reach Dominion status by process of internal development without recourse to further acts of parliament.

Capt. J. H. Brown, Arctic Hero, Dies

Washington Native, 69, Was Retired Coast Guard.

James Henry Brown, retired Coast Guard captain and a native of Washington, died Tuesday at his home in Arlington, Mass., the Coast Guard office here reported yesterday.

Born in Washington in 1865, Capt. Brown entered the service in 1884 and was retired in 1923 for disability in line of duty. He was the executive officer of the Coast Guard cutter Bear, now flagship of the Byrd Antarctic expedition, when it went into the Far North to rescue 300 men aboard an ice-trapped whaling boat in 1897.

During the Spanish-American War he served on the Pacific aboard the cutter Perry and commanded the cutter Seneca on patrol duty in New York harbor during the World War.

Burial will be in New Bedford, Mass., today. Capt. Brown is survived by his widow, Mrs. Hannah H. Brown.

McVey Is Elected By College Group

Land Grant Educators Hear Address by Ezekiel.

F. L. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, yesterday was elected to succeed T. O. Walton as president of the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities. Walton is president of the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College.

An address by Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, "brain truster" and adviser to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, featured the association's closing meeting yesterday. Like George N. Peek, President Roosevelt's special adviser on foreign trade, who spoke Tuesday, Dr. Ezekiel stressed the need of America's strengthening her position in markets abroad.

Other officers elected yesterday were Dean J. G. Lipman, of the agricultural college at Rutgers University, vice president; Dean Thomas P. Cooper, of the University of Kentucky agricultural college, secretary, and Dean F. B. Mumford, of the University of Missouri agricultural college, member of the executive committee.

'Ballyhoo Government' Denounced by Fish

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., attacked the Roosevelt Administration today as "a Government of propaganda and ballyhoo."

Speaking at a New York City Kiwanis luncheon, he said, "we are living in the midst of a Government of propaganda and ballyhoo emanating from several hundred publicity agents at Washington, paid out of the Treasury of the United States."

The people, Fish said, "are thinking in terms of six months ago, but will learn the real situation before the winter is over."

A Laughing Girl at the End of the Rainbow Brings a Sleeping Lettuce Seed Back to Life

Dr. Lewis H. Flint in his laboratory in the Department of Agriculture, where with colored lights he brings to life seeds once "dead."

Flash of Light Only Is Needed—and Presto! the Sprout.

In the Department of Agriculture is the end of the rainbow. But no pot of gold. Only a couple of small wooden boxes, segmented with glass plates and filled with red brick dust, wet with water and sown with lettuce seeds.

It's the seeds that matter. The rainbow is merely an instrument of the department's ends. Precisely, it isn't a rainbow, but quite unethereal light spectrum thrown upon a sheet of white cardboard by an arrangement of lens, prism and mirror.

But the colors are the same as those that sometimes glorify an August thundershower—deep red to violet. And with them the department has discovered how to wake up lettuce seeds that have been sleeping so long that previously they were thought to be dead.

Accidental Discovery.

The discovery was sheer accident, the accident of a girl, one of three working at the same task in the department's seed-testing laboratory, who liked to mix anecdotes and laughter with her work to such an extent, at least, as to make her a bit slower than her sisters at putting lettuce seeds upon a sheet of wet filter paper and covering them for determination, at a later time, of their ability to sprout.

It was observed by the girls' supervisors that seeds prepared for germination tests by the efficient pair who worked intently and with purpose, usually failed to sprout, while those handled by their carefree sister invariably grew. The people in the seed-testing laboratory were pretty puzzled until Congress entered the picture by cutting down the appropriation for the biophysical laboratories.

Dr. Flint Transferred.

Congress, of course, didn't explain anything. It merely made necessary the transfer of Dr. Lewis H. Flint from the biophysical division, now known as the division of genetics and biophysics, to the seed investigation division, where there is still enough money to pay him. Dr. Flint did the explaining.

He put germination plates of lettuce seeds in various places about the laboratory, including a refrigerator with an electric light in it. Nowhere did the seeds sprout so prolifically as they did in the refrigerator.

It was the light. Dr. Flint discovered that the girl who laughed and worked more slowly than her sisters had been exposing seeds to light, whereas her efficient sisters covered them up too quickly. A flash of light is all a sleeping lettuce seed needs to snap it back to life, Dr. Flint learned.

Work Opposite Ways.

Furthermore, he discovered that the components of light affect seed germination in exactly opposite ways. Red, orange and light green light stimulate germination, may revive to productivity a lettuce seed long given up for dead. Infra-red light waves—the ones you can't see—and the blue and violet rays at the other end of the color spectrum, retard germination, may inhibit it altogether.

Hence the rainbow. In the middle of its banded colors lettuce seeds live and flourish. At the ends life sleeps.

For lettuce growers, Dr. Flint has saved many thousands of dollars; for seed testers in virtually every State in the Union, many years of embarrassment. The lettuce growers—those in Florida and the hothouse operators, in particular—never could be certain whether a planting would grow or not.

The testers never could be certain about their tests. Seeds grown in California and harvested in the fall usually declined to germinate. The testers would refuse to approve them for sale. The same seeds returned the next spring by the growers usually sprouted without hesitation.

Now all the Florida growers—who plant before the seeds have had a chance to improve their productivity by a winter's sleep—and the testers have to do is wet the seeds and expose them to light. If they fail then to sprout—no sale. Furthermore an entire shipment of seeds may be exposed and stored away by the grower with reasonable certainty of their sprouting whenever called upon.

When Dr. Flint gets through studying lettuce seeds and their light eccentricities, he's going on with other seeds.

$25,000 Is Sought In Traffic Crashes

3 of 4 Suits Involve Same Accidents.

Four suits, seeking in the aggregate $25,000, were filed in the District Supreme Court yesterday, three of them involving the same accident.

Ina M. Waterfield, 1823 Sixteenth street northwest, sued the Capital Transit Co. for $5,000 damages because of injuries she alleged were sustained when she was struck by a street car while she was driving her automobile at Seventeenth and H streets northwest.

The other suits were based on a crash between the automobiles of Charles P. Deihl and William A. McKenzie, 30 S street northwest. McKenzie asked $10,000, his wife, Agnes G. McKenzie, sought $5,000, and a daughter, Agnes G. McKenzie, sought an additional $5,000.

The suit charged that an automobile operated by Deihl crashed into the McKenzie machine at Silver Hill, Md., last June. Attorneys H. Winship Wheatley and J. F. Lillard filed the papers.

Camp's Booklet Conference Topic

But Ban on CCC Pamphlet Still Stands.

Whether Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work, will stand firm or rescind his ban on the pamphlet "You and Machines" still was uncertain yesterday following a two-hour conference between him and Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education.

Distribution of the pamphlet, written by Prof. William F. Ogburn for members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, was forbidden a week ago by Fechner because it is "pessimistic."

Matters relating to educational policy in general were taken up at the meeting, not simply the pamphlet question, said Dr. Studebaker. Further discussions will be held and a decision on the fate of "You and Machines" and the nine other books scheduled to succeed it probably will be made early next week, he said.

Fechner declined to make any comment on yesterday's meeting.

Urges Reserve Rule All Banks

Rep. Hancock Backs Law to Tighten Control by Government.

Legislation to compel all banks to join the Federal Reserve System, a move designed to give the Government "proper control" over expansion and contraction of credit, was recommended last night by Representative Hancock (Democrat), North Carolina, a member of the House Banking Committee, the Associated Press reported.

"I believe that Government supervision of the banks and protection to their depositors should be extended to include all banks," Hancock said in a radio address. "Perhaps the founding of a central bank is unnecessary, but certainly we need a unified banking system in this country in place of the present 49 degrees of regulation. Without a unified system there can be no effective uniformity of supervision."

Hancock, who had much to do with putting the Administration's new banking laws through the House, said he wanted to see every bank in the country protect its depositors as do present members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"It is the right of every citizen to have this protection," he said, adding, "and I shall bend my efforts to seeing that he gets it."

Chavez in City, Silent on Plans

Expected to Contest Slim Margin of 1,291 for Cutting.

Wearied from a hard election fight and a five-day motor trip from Albuquerque, N. Mex., Representative Dennis Chavez, defeated in a close senatorial race with Senator Bronson Cutting, went into seclusion yesterday on his return to Washington.

Chavez, who relinquished a try for another House term to run against Cutting, had nothing to say on his plans for the future. He is expected to contest the narrow Cutting margin. Complete official returns gave Cutting a lead of 1,291 votes, according to the Associated Press.

Staunchly supported by Administration forces throughout the campaign, Chavez reputedly is in line for a Government post if he fails in his fight for Cutting's seat.

It was pointed out that there is little chance for another elective office anytime soon from his own State. Carl Hatch, newly elected short term Senator from New Mexico, plans to seek reelection to succeed himself in 1936, and the State's lone Representative-elect, J. J. Dempsey, probably will ask renomination.

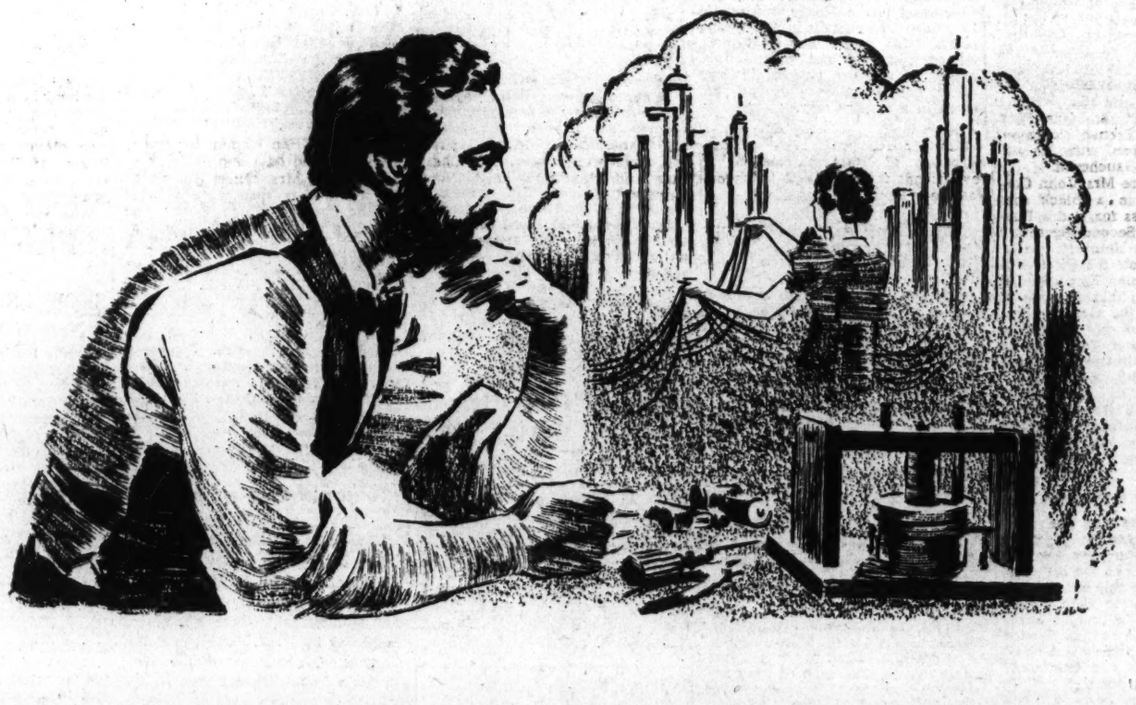
ELEMENTS OF PROGRESS

Vision



VISION created for Alexander Graham Bell . . and for the world . . a tremendous forward stride in the progress of communication. Bell was working to perfect a harmonic telegraph, a device that would permit transmission of several messages over a wire at the same time. Suddenly, he conceived an astounding idea . . transmission of the human voice by wire!

Could it be done? Inspired by his vision, almost stunned by the realization of its boundless possibilities, Bell abandoned the telegraph, went to work to convert his dream of the telephone into a reality.

Today the whole world is enmeshed in a vast system of communication that bridges mountains and oceans . . laughs at distance . . and makes all nations close neighbors. Thus has Bell's dream come true. Mechanical and inventive genius each played their part . . but Alexander Graham Bell's amazing progress was the direct result of his vision.

VISION created for The Washington Post the tremendous strides made in its forward progress during the past year. Vision that foresaw what the readers wanted . . vision that comprehended the news needs of the Nation's Capital with deeper, more complete understanding.

It was vision, also, that prompted thousands of new readers to buy The Post . . each month for the past twelve. And the vision of progressive advertisers placed hundreds of new sales stories before these readers. To the advertiser it was apparent that a newspaper making such progress must be supported by readers who were themselves progressive in spirit. And the progressive prospect . . is the prospect whose response to advertising is greatest.

J. F. Essarys Honor Envoy From Greece

Mrs. Wallach Merriam Presides Over the Tea Table.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Curtis Club presented a charming scene yesterday when Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary entertained at a large cocktail party in honor of the Minister of Greece and Mme. Simopoulos, who will leave December 1, to sail for the former's new post in London.

From the inside and outside, the club presented an equally pleasing atmosphere—creamy white brick, dark green shutters and warm lights shining from the windows into the drizzly dark of the late afternoon; inside bright fires, soft lights and colorful hangings and chairs, and a profusion of autumn flowers and gay people.

Mrs. Essary received in the large drawing room of the club, where several groups gathered before the open fires for a few moments of conversation. The hostess wore a black frock trimmed at the neckline with ruddy gold lame, and a smart black hat trimmed with an egret.

Mrs. Merriam Pours Tea.

Mrs. Wallach Merriam presided over the tea table, which bore many delicious appetizers, tiny cakes and paper-thin sandwiches. Seated in a large, gold brocaded chair, and wearing a black crepe gown trimmed with very dark crimson velvet, Mrs. Merriam, as she always does, drew many admirers. Nearby were the General Counsel for the RFC and Mrs. Stanley Reed, the latter in black velvet.

To mention a few more who were glimpsed in the interesting and distinguished gathering, there were Mrs. George M. Eustis, smart in beige; Mr. Ralph Snowden Hill, Mrs. Kurt Hetzel, in peacock blue; Mr. and Mrs. George Amory Maddox, Mr. Frank Packard, chief of the eastern European division of the State Department; Mr. Robert F. Kelley, the chief of the Far Eastern division; Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mr. George Williams, the Agricultural Secretary of the Spanish Embassy and Mme. Echegaray, the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold Simms, chatting in the doorway with Mr. and Mrs. William P. MacCracken, jr., and the First Secretary of the French Embassy, M. Roger Gaucheron, with his sister, Mlle. Simone Gaucheron.

Also present were Mrs. John Caswell, jr., smart in a black coat trimmed with cross fox and a Russian turban; the Second Secretary of the Argentine Embassy, Senor Don Eduardo Vivot; the First Secretary of the German Embassy, Dr. Ernst Meyer; Frau Lietner, wife of the Counselor of the German Embassy; the Minister of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Ferdinand Veverka; the Secretary of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Popovici, Mrs. Charles Tompkins and her son, Mr. Francis Tompkins; the Minister of Denmark, Mr. Otto Wadsted, who will be joined soon by Mme. Wadsted and their young son, who have been in Europe.

Entertained at Dinner.

Mme. Simopoulos and the Minister were so besieged by those who fear that each time they see this popular couple will be the last, that they were scarcely able to say more than a few words to each. They left the party just in time to hurry to the legation and change for the farewell dinner which the Ambassador of Argentina and Senora de Espil gave in their honor.

Mme. Simopoulos wore a plain black crepe gown, trimmed with silver chains at the neckline and belt, and a large black velvet hat of the beret type.

Mrs. John Philip Hill and Mr. Hill were there, spending a short time in Washington from Baltimore, where they are wintering this year. Mrs. Hill wore a frock of red crinkly crepe, and a smart little red hat. Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, in black with a large velvet hat trimmed with Paradise tips, arrived quite late, as did Mrs. Francis A. Whitten, more striking than ever in a costume of hunter's green corduroy, with a Tyrolean hat of green to match. She was accompanied by her guest, Mrs. James, of Dayton, Ohio. Mrs. James wore an ensemble of soft grayish wool, with a brimmed black hat.

In a group around the fireplace were Mme. Sokolowska, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy; Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, and Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom, while in the dining room their respective husbands were in a deep conversation. The Secretary of War, Mr. George H. Dern, was accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Harry Baxter.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Yesterday morning when coming out of my home—whom should I fairly run into but Mary Patterson. She had just finished her morning music lessons and was homeward bound for the Mayflower.

We walked downtown together and at Connecticut avenue and Eighteenth street we saw a most amusing sight. The traffic was unusually noisy—with the honkings of limousines, raucous coughs of trucks and perky warnings of smaller cars. The bedlam had penetrated all of the houses in the neighborhood and out of the window of one leaned a little old gray gentleman, who barked his protest. Little Mr. "Schnauzer" did not like it one bit and in his doggie ways was voicing his opinions.

Barbara Baker, whose studies, much to our disgust, occupy entirely too much of her time, is to be presented at a tea on December 27, by her uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. John H. Iden. Speaking of Barbara, not many weeks ago, she found the hideout of Washington's seemingly only remaining victoria, and now I believe that several young persons are on the track of this vehicle.

Modest Wife of Emil Hurja Plans Trip on Freighter to Earn Much-Needed Rest

Tramp Ships Her Favorite Travel Medium

By Hope Ridings Miller.

TO MANY WIVES of New Dealers coming to Washington in 1932, watching developments of the new Administration at close range was one of their most thrilling experiences. But to Mrs. Emil Hurja, wife of the assistant chairman of the Democratic committee, it was only another bright thread in the colorful skein of a life packed with excitement.

Yet Mrs. Hurja would be the last person to admit that; for modest to a degree, she prefers to pass comparatively unnoticed in the galaxy of Washington hostesses whose lives have been unusual.

Sitting in the handsomely furnished drawing room of her house in Georegtown, this dainty, flaxen-haired woman was incredulous that any one would be interested in the events that made up her life before she came to Washington.

"I doubt any one will think my experiences have been particularly interesting," she said repeatedly during the interview, as she quietly recounted some of the incidents that were commonplace to her but would be circled in red in the memory of the average person.

Of Danish Descent.

Born Gudrun Andreasen, of Danish descent, she spent her babyhood in the Klondike and the Pacific Northwest, the first white child in the early days of the colony that grew out of the gold rush.

"My father, at 20 years of age, was a teacher in Denmark," she said, "and he left his position as tutor to the family of a Danish baron to come to America. Many times while visiting in Denmark I have wondered how he could have exchanged the peaceful comfort of his home for the arduous existence of carving a new career in this country's frontiers.

"But it seems he had a liberal share of the Viking spirit, which was largely responsible for the fact that my childhood was spent in the Klondike, where he became one of the most widely known mining operators."

Among Mrs. Hurja's family photographs is one of a child whose blonde curls fall over her lace-collared, long-waisted dress. That is Gudrun Andreasen, who at 4 years of age was known throughout the Klondike as the "Little Sweetheart of the Yukon," and the "Pet of the Northwest Mounted Police." It was at this period that she made her "debut" as a child actress and singer in the Klondike at benefits for the needy and derelict miners who never "struck it rich."

Showered With Nuggets.

"The biggest hit I made on the stage at that time was when I sang a number entitled 'I Need the Money,'" Mrs. Hurja laughed, her blue eyes shining. "For when I had finished, gold nuggets and silver dollars showered around me, more than I could possibly pick up and hold in my hands."

Numerous programs she still cherishes recount her progress as a musician and actress through her college days at the University of Washington. A few years later she became an apprentice in Eva La Gallienne's Civic Repertory Theater Co. in New York.

"I soon discovered that my histrionic talents were decidedly not those of a Duse," she laughed, "so while I continued my apprenticeship, I took the work seriously—but not myself. However, since then the work has proved useful in a number of instances."

The discussion, turning again to her college days at the University of Washington, revealed that her interest in dramatics and music was supplemented by an interest in journalism. Her reportorial work and feature stories, done first as class assignments and later used in the college newspaper, eventually gained her a "vacation job" on the Seattle Post Intelligencer before she had finished college. Her journalistic accomplishments also paved the way for her romance with Emil Hurja, who was a finished newspaperman before he entered the University of Washington, and editor of the college daily when his future wife began contributing to it.

First Woman Scribe on Paper.

After graduation, Mrs. Hurja was given a full-time place on the staff of the Post Intelligencer, the first woman reporter in the city room of that newspaper.

While she was making a name for herself in the field of journalism, her husband-to-be was winning his first political laurels. Having been a power in campus politics, he was chosen as the college representative to go on Henry Ford's peace ship to Europe. Returning from that trip, he became secretary of the Delegate from Alaska, a position which he resigned after a few months to join the army.

"We were married soon after the war," Mrs. Hurja said, "and I left my job in Seattle to go with my husband to southern California, where he published a string of community newspapers."

The oil boom in Texas, however, eventually beckoned the enterprising Hurjas to the oil fields, and they were soon editing and publishing a newspaper known as the Breckenridge Daily American.

Relates Oil Boom Experiences.

"That was, perhaps, the most thrilling of all our earlier experiences," she said. "One has to visit an oil-boom town to realize how different it is from the average community. I remember when the mud, from rain and oil, was so deep in the streets of Breckenridge one rarely ventured across without wearing boots. But that makes little difference in a place where life is attuned to the boom of oil trucks and the chug of pumps."

Even now, Mrs. Hurja makes frequent trips back to Texas, where her father still has oil interests.

Returning to California later, the Hurjas still were in newspaper work, but she also conducted another type of business on the side. The latter was proof of her unusual ingenuity and initiative. Soon she was buying houses, one after another—but not the second, until she had sold the first, and not the third, until she had sold the second

She built, landscaped and decorated houses truly indigenous to southern California—those types of homes making a particular appeal to the newcomer to California who had idealized a home around a patio, set off with a few palms and some orange trees.

Abandoned Real Estate.

But her real estate business, successful though it was, was abandoned when she and her husband moved to New York, where he was engaged in financial work in Wall street and where her home was a gathering place for friends coming to New York from all over the United States and from many foreign countries she has visited.

In Washington, during the last two years, the attractive Hurja home in Georgetown has been a gathering place for leading political leaders of both parties.

Invitations to Mrs. Hurja's dinner parties—which always are small affairs, where the stiffest of stiff shirts wilt—are much sought after. There always is stimulating conversation around her perfectly appointed dinner table, and an atmosphere of "camaraderie" afterward in the drawing room, where the most dignified guest probably will join in the chorus while the hostess plays "A Bicycle Built for Two" or "She Was Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage."

Rare Books Numerous.

The book-lined library on the third floor of the Hurja home is a veritable treasure room of rare volumes and collections of Texas and Alaska material. Both of the Hurjas have an absorbing interest in history. He is particularly interested in the period from 1820 to 1860, and has a number of portraits of Andrew Jackson bearing original autographs.

While her husband, in his spare moments, is writing a biography of Robert J. Walker—first chairman of the Democratic national committee—Mrs. Hurja is gathering material for a biography of the first woman in England to make her living by her pen.

In addition to that, Mrs. Hurja finds time to write publicity for charity events and take an active part in some organizations, including the Woman's National Democratic Club and the League of American Pen Women.

"For recreation of the most satisfying type, I recommend a long trip on a freighter," Mrs. Hurja said, in answer to the question as to how she ever found time for much-needed rest periods. Her reply was a startling surprise to the interviewer, who would have no New Dealer on the deck of a luxurious transatlantic line—but a freighter——

"Yes, I prefer freighters," she insisted. "I've taken many freighter jaunts to Central America, to Chile, to the Virgin Islands. I'm planning a trip of that type now, but there's no telling when I'll ever get away."

Hessler-Henderson, Inc.

Today Mrs. Emil Hurja (left) is acclaimed one of the most charming of the Nation's New Dealers, but when she was 4-year-old Gudrun Andreasen (above) she was known as "The Little Sweetheart of the Yukon."

List of Sports Grows Rapidly; 5 This Season

Hand Ball, Soft Ball, Pot Shot, Jai Alai and Hul-che Are Added.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

NEW SPORTS are cropping up so fast that everyone from the amazon to the tea-sipper can find a sport she likes. This season there are five newcomers—hand-ball, softball, pot shot, jai alai and hul-che.

Hul-che, though it is new to us, is based on a weapon used centuries ago by the Mayans. The hul-che is a very long arrow, heavier than our modern ones, that the Mayans hurled long distances in warfare. The sport, developed in California by Robert Stacy-Judd, the archeologist, has some of the attributes of javelin throw. Women can compete on equal terms with men, since accuracy in the sport does not depend on the amount of force used.

Handball Popular.

Handball has reached the status of A. A. U. championships. The game, played with gloves and a hard ball, has reached sufficient popularity to cause the scheduling of a title tournament for this fall.

Jai alai, imported from Southern beaches, is a throw and catch game, but its individuality lies especially in the long, deep crosse with which the ball is caught and thrown. This is made of basket material, and shaped something like a cutlass.

Wide World Photo.

This is the way to hurl the hul-che, a very long, narrow arrow, that centuries ago was a Mayan weapon of warfare. The sport, developed in California by Robert Stacy-Judd, archeologist, has some of the attributes of the javelin throw. The lady demonstrating is Mrs. Robert Stacy-Judd.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Should He Seek Lost Love, Asks Man Who Plans to Leave Wife.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Twenty-three years ago, at the age of 24, I married a girl whom I had known for two years and whom I thought at that time I really loved. But pretty soon I realized the terrible mistake I had made. Only a few months after we were married, she began questioning me every time I came home a little late, was constantly reminding me of my weaknesses, of how common my people were, how common were those who go to shows, dances, and so on; of how hard she had to work and how easy I always had everything.

* * * *

When our youngest child was about a year old I accepted a traveling sales position and was away from home, except for week-ends, for about ten years. When I came home, all I heard was repeated scandal, sorrows, criticism of my own people and praise of her family.

* * * *

For the last few years I have been at home, and during that time, things have gone from bad to worse. I positively can not stand it any longer. I have purposely been staying out late of nights to avoid needless arguments. For years I have tried to make the best of things, and, until two years ago, had never thought of another woman than my wife.

* * * *

But one night two years ago, through a friend of mine, I met a woman whom I later learned to really love, in spite of the fact I did my best not to, and whom I tried to forget, but could not. For the good of all concerned, this woman left town several months ago. I have not heard from her since and do not know her address. I thought I could forget her, but I can not.

* * * *

I have resigned my position and am parting from my wife. Where I will go I do not yet know. Should I make an effort to find this woman I love, with whom I could be happy, or should I try to forget and make the best of life alone?

BILL.

DEAR BILL: I see no reason why you shouldn't make an effort to find the woman you love, providing you first procure a divorce from the woman you're determined to live with no longer, and make adequate financial provision for the care and education of your children.

Women Take Role of Ruler In French Life

Lead in the Social Graces While Lacking Political and Legal Rights.

By Andre Vulliet.

IT IS GENERALLY admitted throughout the world that the United States is woman's paradise.

It is just as widely believed in the United States that French women are the most unfortunate on earth.

Such assumptions are naturally based on the fact that American women enjoy a remarkable independence while their French sisters suffer from a complete lack of legal or political rights.

But strange though it may be, it does not seem that the French woman is, or has ever been, eager to be admitted officially on an equal footing with man. To struggle for her "rights" sounds to her like a waste of time. Without any "right," she has managed to get all the fun out of the show, pulling the ropes, while the man was on the stage, getting the spotlight.

Give Elaborate Parties.

Of course, if you are bold enough to go with a New York debutante, you are likely to discover, at your expense, that there is some truth in the American-woman's-paradise opinion.

It is a fact that, even leaving the "debutante" out of the picture, American girls somehow get more material joys than any other girl in the world.

Girls, in the United States, give and are given more elaborate parties than in any other country; married women enjoy more independence and freedom.

Boy friends and husbands seem to put themselves out to please. They certainly make more sacrifices in money than a Frenchman ever would.

All this looks like an unquestionable royalty of American women. They reign supreme. But is it not over an empty palace?

For the American man, the gallant servant, is rarely at home. He never comes home for lunch and is often busy until late in the evening with his golf, his club or his friends. Seldom will he keep his wife "au courant" of his business life.

Depression may have brought man and wife closer to each other, especially in middle classes and among young couples of little means. "But," as Gilbert Chinard, Washington correspondent of Le Temps, recently wrote, "if prosperity comes in and if the husband's business expands, the association between the two is broken loose and husband and wife rapidly lead independent lives."

Privileged Position.

Despite the fact that a French woman, nowadays, has no more rights than a child, a convict or a mad person, it is reasonably safe to say that she enjoys a privileged, almost symbolic, position in France's social structure.

She has succeeded in identifying herself with her country. France, in person, is a woman. On French stamps, on coins, on international cartoons, between stripe-trousered Uncle Sam and John Bull, there she is with her cap and her white toga, personifying France and often coming out with the upper hand. Those wily Frenchmen are devoted to "Marianne," for they know she will defend their interests probably better than they would.

Fifteen centuries ago it was a woman, Sainte Genevieve, who saved Paris from Attila, the barbaric leader. Again, 1,000 years later, it was up to a girl, 17-year-old Joan of Arc, to kick the English out of France and rouse the first elements of a mounting patriotism. She is now a sort of myth and France, alone among great nations, has a woman for her national hero.

Since then, the list is long of women who, directly or indirectly, played a prominent part in the making of French history.

Salons Created by Women.

And who could tell the importance of "salons" in the refined development of French civilization? If it is not going too far to say that the art of conversation and light gallantry is one of the most precious achievements of French culture, then French women deserve all the credit for it.

Salons are their creation and that fine tradition is still kept alive by such remarkable women as Mme. Alphonse Daudet, the widow of the famous author, who can revive for you Victor Hugo, Zola, Maupassant, Pierre Loti, Anatole France and many others she has known personally.

Double Bass Player Needs Strong Hands

JACQUES POWELL, who heads the string bass section of the National Symphony Orchestra.

This is the fourth of a series of articles on the instruments of the orchestra. Students planning to attend the children's concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra, which The Post will sponsor early in December, are urged to clip these articles for scrapbooks.

THE DOUBLE BASS, which stands beside its player at the rear of the orchestra, is larger than the player himself. Like the cello, it has a spike which rests upon the floor. Owing to the thickness of its strings and because of the great size of the instrument, exceptional strength is required to press down the heavy strings. The bow is very sturdy.

Solo playing on the double bass would seem at first sight to have all the delicacy of an elephant dancing. The double bass harmonics are of little value, yet there have been great solo players on the double bass, such as the Italian Dragonetti, (1763-1846).

The very deep tones of the double bass are essential as support for other instruments. It is the giant member of the violin family.

The tone-color of the double bass is heavy, gruff, ponderous. It may be used to burlesque the effects of lighter instruments. In swift passages it can never be entirely clear; for its long, heavy strings are slow to cease vibrating.

Beethoven gave the double bass a share of important work, notably at the end of the Fourth Symphony. There are also some wonderfully impressive passages for the double bass in his Ninth Symphony.

The double bass, then, may be used for the most part as a humble drudge, giving the foundation of orchestral music. But it has capabilities, and the great composers have given it passages that are of the utmost significance and importance.

150 Tri-Delts To Celebrate Founders' Day

Entertainment Program Will Be Given at Dinner Monday.

APPROXIMATELY 150 members of the Delta Delta Delta National Sorority will come to Washington to celebrate its forty-sixth anniversary at a Founders' Day dinner Monday night at Olney Inn. The local alumnae, the Baltimore Alliance and the two nearby active groups at Goucher and Maryland University will attend.

Delta Delta Delta was founded Thanksgiving Eve, 1888.

The Baltimore Alliance will contribute as its part of the entertainment program the effective and impressive candle-light ritual, while the two active chapters will present skits and stunts. The local chapter will give a one-act play. Those taking part in the play will be Mrs. Robert M. Barnett, Mrs. Mason F. Ball, Miss Marian Sands, Miss Dorothy Kirkwood, Mrs. Howard Eales and Miss Doris Zabel. Mrs. Victor Lumsden is the director.

Mrs. Robert M. Barnett, general chairman of the dinner committee, is assisted by Mrs. Audrey Davis, Baltimore Alliance; Miss Genevieve Miller, Goucher; Miss Margaret Golden, Maryland. Mrs. Mason F. Ball is in charge of arrangements.

Will Present Three Plays.

THE PLAYERS group of Washington branch, American Association of University Women, will present a series of three plays at 7:45 o'clock tonight in the large dining room of the club.

"His Sainted Grandmother," by Lord Dunsany, and "Dreamy Kid," by Eugene O'Neill, will be given under the direction of Miss Alice A. Jewell. "Spreading the News," by Lady Gregory, will be directed by Miss Mary Vaccaro.

Among those taking part in the plays are Miss Nanele Kees, Miss Augusta Kriener, Miss Mary Pearce, Dr. Edith Allen, Miss Mildred Green, Miss Vaccaro, Miss Sara R. The production staff includes Miss Jewell, Miss Ellen Anderson, Mrs. J. L. Jackson, and Mrs. Carl C. Farrington.

Program at Arts Club.

MRS. ROBERT EARL REISCHAUER will demonstrate the art of making Japanese landscapes in sand tonight at the Arts Club. This unusual art is entirely different from the Indian sand paintings sometimes seen in this country. Since the sixth century, "Bon siki" has ranked among the "aristocratic arts" in the cherry blossom kingdom.

Mrs. Reischauer will be assisted by Miss Sukada, in costume.

The hostesses will be Mrs. Susan B. Chase and Miss Marguerite C. Munn.

Dr. Arthur Deerin Call, editor of Advocate of Peace, will address the Vermont State Association of the District of Columbia at 8:15 o'clock tonight at the Roosevelt Hotel. His subject will be "Talking Turkey." Music for the social hour will be furnished by the Jacobson Sisters. All Vermonters have been invited to attend.

Mrs. William I. Johnson will speak on "Clashing Interests in China" before the meeting of the education committee, Woman's National Democratic Club, at 11 o'clock today at the clubhouse.

The Society of Free Lance Writers of Washington will meet at 8:15 o'clock tonight at the Shoreham Hotel. The program will include the reading and analysis of a a short story by Maj. E. L. Dyer, the president.

Store Displays Assorted Line Of Art Objects

New Shop on Connecticut Avenue Offers Wide Selection.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

"UNIQUE" and "bizarre" fall short of describing the extraordinary shop recently opened on Connecticut avenue. Hitherto, many Washington women have journeyed to New York to purchase many of the individual objets d'art sold in the main store there. Now they have only to take advantage of this local branch, where they can select from the hundreds of unusual items on display or choose from the handy catalogues.

It's a refreshing and rather overwhelming moment when you step from the gray concrete walk into this large high-ceilinged dazzlingly white room. Your eyes rove dizzily from the modernistic cabinets that line the walls to the strange glass and chromium tables scattered over the floor. As a child might feel when given access to Santa's workshop, so do you feel here. Those myriads of fascinating pieces that you see from time to time in pictures of luxurious penthouses and mansions of celebrities seem to be assembled here.

There's a marvelous selection of imported inhalers made of tinkling Baccarat glass. Some of these are small enough to hold in the palm of your hand, others so large they hide your face as you hold them to your lips.

Giving out a strange blue smoky reflection are the mirror trays delicately tinted in a soft misty twilight shade. A large modernistic ash tray is molded from one solid piece of glass and scooped out in the center to give strange angular effects. This, together with a tuled leather lamp, in brown and gold, topped with a tan shade, is ideal for a man's office or den.

A large wooden shelf suspended from the side wall by means of slanting silken cords holds a variety of wooden ware. There are immense salad bowls set on crystal knobs, titan serving spoons and forks, large oblong wooden platters, mixing bowls, cheese trays and hors d'oeuvre sets.

On display in the front window you'll see some striking crystal highball and old-fashioned glasses rimmed in old copper.

Anything in the way of glassware is available upon order. In other words, if you conceive the idea of having cocktail glasses on star-shaped bases, and want them monogrammed in italic letters, all you have to do is say so. If you want crystal fingerbowls rimmed in silver, candelabra in weird shapes, you've only to say the word.

42-Pound Turkey Gobbler.

The little boy Nils, who saw the world from the back of a goose, had to shrink in size before his travels began. Little boys and girls in Washington could stay as they are and still ride the turkey gobbler strutting his feathers and plumes in the show window of a local shop. Since the time he first broke from what must have been a fairly large egg, he has eaten his way to fame. At present he is a champion gobbler weighing no less than 42 pounds.

If you want to see an exaggerated idea of what you'll have for Thanksgiving dinner, don't fail to take a peek at the pompous old bird.

Smoothing Neck Wrinkles.

"Crepy throats need firming, not softening," says a certain beautician. "Numbers of women, particularly those who have lost weight too rapidly, or those verging on middle-age suffer from this type of beauty trouble, and from lack of scientific instruction, continue to apply creams which soften and whiten the skin instead of tightening it. They wonder why with all the pains they take the crepyness continues. It is for these women I have assembled this treatment set which will smooth out the wrinkles and give the neck a youthful appearance. After all, the neck is just a continuation of the face and it should be cared for just as assiduously."

This crepy throat set contains a cleansing cream, a skin tonic, a special neck and throat blend and an astringent, all products especially prepared for saggy skin.

Chenille Rugs.

Long bare halls become infinitely more cheerful if they're given a bit of coziness with one or two of the attractive Chenille rugs selling for 64 cents in a downtown store. The cold tiles of the bathroom floor are not to be shivered over if you've one of these soft, absorbent rugs.

They are woven in a maze of colors in old colonial patterns.

Convenient Hand Bags.

World-wide and city-wide travelers find the new hand bags featured in a local store no end of convenience. They come in two styles, in brown and black, rough sealskin, rough and plain calfskin with inclosed zipper and special isinglass-covered compartment for passport. Another has a small inclosure for your street car pass immediately under the flap.

This saves the trouble of groping through your bag for a pass that is smothered under compact, cigarettes, change purse and lipstick.

Lounging Pajamas Make An Ideal Christmas Gift

Pattern No. 650.

THERE IS a time-honored song about the glory of the wearing of the green. Not yet celebrated in song—but worthy of it—is the comfort of the wearing of pajamas. What is so refreshing to lounge in as a smart, gay outfit like the one shown? And what would be more appreciated as a Christmas gift.

The neck is convertible, either turning down in revers or buttoning quite high. The trousers have a fitted waistband with pleats below, combining fullness with a flat fit. The pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 20. Size 18 (36) requires 5¼ yards of 35-inch fabric.

Culbertson on Bridge

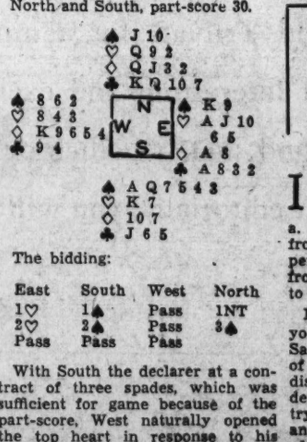
A Postmortem.

When after the play of a hand is completed a close double dummy inspection of the cards is made, very often ways are found in which seemingly unmakable contracts could have been fulfilled.

On the hand below, the East player, merely by careful and intelligent defense, found a way of defeating North and South's game contract. The declarer, after being forced to concede defeat, complained that he could not see any way that his contract could have been fulfilled. His partner, however, who was a very fine double dummy analyst, found a play which the declarer could have made at trick one which would have rendered the defense powerless. This play, though very interesting, is one which it would take a super-brilliant mind to think of without seeing all the cards.

East, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable;
North and South, part-score 30.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1♡	1♠	Pass	1NT
2♡	2♠	Pass	3♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

With South the declarer at a contract of three spades, which was sufficient for game because of the part-score, West naturally opened the top heart in response to his partner's bid. South made the natural play of ducking in dummy, and East played the ten, forcing the declarer's King. South now immediately led a low club in an effort to get to dummy and take the spade finesse. West started an echo by playing the nine, and the Queen was played from dummy. East, of course, knew it would be futile to try to keep the declarer out of the dummy and finally decided to hold up his Ace of clubs on the first round of that suit so that in case his partner got in before he did, the latter would have a club left, to lead and thus get a third round ruff. After the Queen of clubs held, the spade Jack was led from dummy, and East promptly covered, knowing that by so doing he would stand a good chance of forcing declarer to win the second round of spades in dummy in order not to sacrifice a trick. South won the trick with the spade Ace and had to lead a low spade back to dummy's ten. He now led out the club King in an effort to pave the way for reentry to his own hand. (Actually no play the declarer could have made at this point would have saved him.) East this time won with the Ace and gave his partner a ruff, and subsequently a heart trick and two diamond tricks enabled East and West to defeat the contract.

The play which North, the dummy, discovered which would have enabled South to fulfill his contract was that of dummy's Queen on the opening heart lead. East could now win or not, as he chose. If the Queen was allowed to hold the trick, the spade finesse could immediately be taken and the North hand reentered to draw the last trump by a club lead toward the Jack. On the other hand, if East decided to top the heart Queen with the Ace, the heart King in declarer's hand or a ruff of the third round of hearts would provide South with an all-important subsequent card of reentry to his hand to facilitate the drawing of the last trump. How many players, I wonder, would be far-sighted enough to realize the value of playing the heart Queen from dummy at Trick 1?

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF NOVEMBER 22 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 5:30 to 7:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m.

If November 22 is your natal day, you were born in the zodiacal sign, Sagittarius. Sagittarius people are of a generous, jovial, genial, frank dispostion, with a great love for independence. They resent anyone trying to dictate to them. Ambitious and possessing an indomitable spirit of perservance, they are seldom ready to acknowledge defeat.

Some Sagittarians are decidedly impulsive and very outspoken, so their meanings are seldom misconstrued. Mentally well balanced, their judgment, as a rule, can be relied upon.

Birthstone is the turquoise or carbuncle. Colors: Blue and light yellow. Flowers: Goldenrod, chrysanthemum, carnation and jessamine. Thursday is usually their lucky day.

If a woman and November 22 is your birthday, you probably are profoundly religious and inclined to be rather sensitive regarding your convictions, even if they are very liberal. Curb any tendency of being extreme in your likes and dislikes, for life may be much simpler if you do not permit people to affect you too greatly. Your creative ability should enable you to have financial success, if commercialized.

If a man and November 22 is your natal day, avoid letting personalities sway your business policies or transactions. If you judge things from purely a merit standpoint your progress will be rapid. A wife should be instrumental in helping your career and bringing happiness into your life.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

Lovely Jocelyn Crane, who is a dependent guest of the Oliver Keenes on a luxury trip to Paris, finds herself unwillingly involved in screening Rita Keene's flirtation with Prince Glazanoff and protecting Ollie Keene from Carrie Franks, a blonde adventuress. This has already resulted in the loss of half a string of pearls loaned her by Mary Derby, in love with Jocelyn's husband, Dick, the day of sailing.

Mary cables for the pearls. Not knowing that Mary plans to sell them and invest the money in Dick's business which is on the rocks, Jocelyn sends back a fine reproduction. She has consented to pose for Ogden Temple, multi-millionaire who is in love with her, intending to use the $2,000 he will give her to buy genuine pearls to replace the artificial ones she sent Mary.

At a party given by the Marsdens (friends who brought the pearls back to Mary) a guest who is a jewel expert inspects them. To Mary's and Dick's consternation they learn Jocelyn has not returned the original pearls.

The shock of this determines Dick to mortgage his home and go to Paris to see for himself what caused the substitution, not believing it could have been made with Jocelyn's knowledge.

MARY sank on the winding staircase, halfway up, her powder-blue skirt spread from her slim waist. Dick leaned over her, his knee crooked on the step above, his body folded so that his bright hair under the hall light shown level with her eyes.

Explanation Demanded.

"Out with it, Mary." He thrust his jaw forward. "You cabled for the pearls you loaned Lynn?"

She nodded.

"These are the pearls she sent you?"

Mary could only nod again. The world was heaving around her.

Dick went on—"In other words, you loaned my wife a valuable string of pearls. She returns them to you—I don't know when or why. And—it's not the same string."

"I don't understand," Mary said in a low, weary voice. "I don't understand." She didn't even attempt to carry on with the lie she had offered Lena Marsden. "I must tell you the truth now, Dick," she continued tonelessly. "It concerns you as well as me. I meant to sell the pearls—for our business."

"My God!" Dick's hand clenched against his side.

"It doesn't make any difference," Mary said unhappily. "I mean—I always meant to sell them—to invest in something like we've decided on——"

Must See Jocelyn.

Dick wasn't listening. "Someone must have stolen the originals from Lynn. That's it. I'm going to get to the bottom of this." And all the things he had been pushing out of his mind crowded back. What was Jocelyn doing over there that such a thing could happen? She was responsible for those pearls. No—he was responsible for them! Why couldn't Jocelyn take care of things entrusted to her? What was happening to her?

"Please, Dick, let's drop it. Please——" Mary's smile was wan, and heedless of anyone who might see her, she put her hand on Dick's clenched fist. "This isn't going to change our partnership. I'll get the money——"

Dick didn't seem to hear her. "I've got to go over to her——" he said suddenly, in such a loud voice that Mary's hand tightened warningly.

"Steady, Dick. You can't go," she said.

"I've got to," he repeated stubbornly. "No letters or cables will settle this. I've got to know how this happened."

Would Mortgage House.

Through Mary's mind raced disturbing thoughts. Dangerous to investigate how the pearls had been returned so perfectly duplicated—with the original clasp. She saw him lost to her if he went. Perhaps not, though.

"How can you go, Dick? Where will you get the money?" Her lips felt stiff.

"I can raise a mortgage on the house," he said. "I promised Lynn when we bought it I never would mortgage it. But I'd have to anyway now, to settle up with you. It's the only fair thing——"

Nothing mattered to him now but to go to Jocelyn. She couldn't know of this terrible thing that had happened. Violence shook Dick. Jocelyn couldn't take care of herself. She needed him.

Two thousand dollars. The price of the vanished pearls, the price Jocelyn had put upon herself to pose for a figure of Faith, wearing the mantle of plenty, girdled with fruits and flowers.

"Why do you need $2,000?" he asked abruptly. "Why not $200,000?"

"I see no reason for telling you." But suddenly Jocelyn wished she might pour out the whole miserable story of where Rita Keene's intrigues had led her.

Temple allowed silence to deepen around them. Within the reach and shadow of his massive head, all that she had done in her panic now seemed unutterably stupid to Jocelyn. Big sins, big virtues, he would understand. Never fears or cowardice. And it had been fear driving her to send those artificial pearls to Mary Derby.

Her Confidence Asked.

"I can't quite make you out, Mrs. Crane," he said after a pause. "What is a woman of your calibre doing with the Keenes? With this Carrie Franks—and Glazanoff, Prince Glazanoff!" Contemptuously, he jingled them together like so many small coins.

"The Keenes are old friends of mine," Jocelyn answered slowly.

"You are loyal," he conceded with a shade of impatience. "But I watched you on the Ile de France. A beautiful woman should be as radiant as a perfect jewel. Yet that first night of sailing when, accidentally, I ran into you on deck, you were—forgive me—in a destructive state of emotion."

Jocelyn nodded, shivering a little. He had summoned up a picture she wished to forget—herself shaken with doubt and pain, blurred by tears as the ship drew out and away from Dick. Dick and Mary Derby waving her off—"I was very unhappy," she murmured.

A curiously gentle expression softened Temple's rugged face. "And so," he said, quietly, "you exposed yourself on the boat to a woman like Mrs. Franks? And here in Paris you have sanctioned the affair of your friend, Mrs. Keene, with Glazanoff?" He frowned aside Joyelyn's indignant denial. "It isn't good enough, Mrs. Crane."

Temple Is Rebuffed.

The color surged to Jocelyn's cheeks. "You are really extraordinary, Mr. Temple," she coldly rebuked him. "Are you not confusing your millions with your manners when you question me this way? If in consenting to pose for you for a certain sum, I seem to have given you the right——"

"What is money to me?" he demanded, with sudden harshness. "It is my right to know if your soul is as beautiful as you are. I have seen too many beautiful bodies with greedy little souls." There was a touch of melancholy to his deep voice that halted Jocelyn's retort. "That is why I love jewels," he went on. "Their fires are pure." For a second he lowered his massive head and Jocelyn saw that his dark hair was threaded with white.

"I think I am sorry for you," she said gently. "You are one of the richest men in the world. You have everything—power, ideals—everything but trust in people." The thought of trust was a two-edged blade that cut at her own heart. For did she still trust Dick?

As if he read her mind, Ogden Temple's look bore full upon her. "To have either too much or too little is a test of faith," he said. "When I find the woman who means faith to me, I shall never let her go. I am giving you the chance to be that woman—first in marble—"

An Unusual Man.

Jecelyn felt oddly moved. There was nothing small or cheap in this man. His ugliness was force and tinged with beauty as she looked back at him. "Mr. Temple, I love my husband." It was the first time Dick's name had fallen between them.

And for the second time that evening he returned: "You are loyal."

Sitting beside him in the beautiful car that glided her back to the Georges V., she relaxed with an old sense of safety in the towering shadow of the big man. It wasn't his millions that counted, Jocelyn thought. It was the splendor of his force, so ruthless yet so gentle at times. Yes, she could trust Ogden Temple. She could even, sitting there beside him in the velvety darkness of the limousine, summon up the image of Dick as her heart loved to see him—his eager gray eyes, his thick light hair. His fine quick movements in the youth that Temple could never know again.

If only she could foget these weeks in between—that recurring picture of Mary Derby, with her elfin, boyish head tilted back to look up at Dick; the sudden curl and curve of an allure Mary could disguise so well in those little office tailored suits—

"I'll send the car for you tomorrow at eleven," Temple said. "I have my studio in my house near Versailles—only a short drive. If that is agreeable to you?" It was settled in his mind. He stood smiling down at her in the lobby of the Georges V.

No Friendly Response.

"I'll come." Jocelyn impulsively put out her hand.

She was turning toward the elevator when she saw Ollie in heavy conversation with the room clerk. Ollie, in dinner clothes, sagged a bit against the counter. It took only a glance to know that Ollie Keene was in one of his rare ugly moods tonight. And she realized suddenly that it might be her fault. She had promised him, if he would give up Carrie, to fill in a few hours of his unending leisure and play. Now she went swiftly over to him. "Going or coming, Ollie?"

His brown eyes filmed, he regarded her at length solemnly keeping his balance. "Been tryin' to get you for hours," he mumbled. "Telephone—no answer—That's not nice, Lynn—" He wagged his head. "Wanna go back to go places n'have a party?"

"It's too late, Ollie. Come upstairs and we'll have a nightcap, shall we?" she coaxed him.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

"OH, JIMMY, I forgot to get sugar for the cake icing. Will you run up to the store and get it for me?"

"Heck, Ma, do I have to go? Bill and I are building a castle with my blocks."

"But mother needs the sugar. You run along like a good boy and I'll give you and Bill each a nickel for lollypops."

Paying for tasks that children should do as their contribution to household tasks is fatal. It breeds the kind of boys and girls who smirk up to Mrs. Jones, leaving the grocery store with her arms full of bundles, and offer to help—then wait hopefully around for a dime when they have carried the packages to Mrs. Jones' house. It leads them to expect a reward every time they do any small task around the house that they should be willing to undertake in a spirit of helpfulness.

Give the children an allowance if you find that that system works; pay them for any work that they are to do regularly, such as cleaning the ashes out of the furnaces, and see that they do the job thoroughly before they are paid. But don't encourage them to "chisel" a nickel by offering it every time you ask them to do something that interferes with their own pleasure or plans.

First Course Has Important Place on Menu

Celery Hors d'Oeuvres and Finnan Haddie Canapes Are Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

MAKE YOUR party menu start with its best foot forward. In other words consider your appetizer or first course carefully. This course is as important to the meal as a dash of spice to a cake.

Hostesses no longer feel bound to the old convention—a formal dinner should begin with soup. Other savory bits of food have outplaced soup as a first course, not only for formal dinners, but for informal luncheons, suppers or dinners. These other dishes are called appetizers, and some prefer to call them relishes, canapes or hors d'oeuvres because they are now a glorified edition of a famous old side dish that has been given the prominent place as a first course.

No matter what is served in the place of soup, remember the qualifications of an appetizer or first course. Use a food that will be attractive and bright. The appetizer must have a distinct or piquant flavor to serve its purpose—stimulate the appetite for the meal that is to follow. Citrus fruits, salty or pickled foods, raw oysters or clams, melons, all these foods act to whet the appetite. Remember, too, serve appetizers in small portions, as they must intrigue but not satisfy the appetite.

Stimulate Appetite.

A formal dinner requires the same kind of appetitzer for each guest. The appetizer is placed on a small plate and set on the service plate before each place shortly before the guests are seated. However, for an informal party the hostess has an opportunity to give her guests a choice of appetizers, as this course is often served from large trays in the drawing room. In that case cocktails (they may be alcoholic or nonalcoholic) are served accompanied by canapes or hors d'oeuvres.

An hors d'oeuvre is a small portion of highly seasoned or flavored food, served hot or cold at the beginning of a meal to stimulate the appetite. A canape is an hors d'oeuvre served on bread or toast.

A platter of hors d'oeuvres can be skilfully arranged by an inexperienced person, if daintiness of arrangement and appropriateness of food flavors are considered. The following are just a few of the ready-to-serve hors d'oeuvres that may be purchased: Canned sardines, shrimp, salmon, chicken, potted and deviled meats, green and ripe olives, caviar, anchovies and anchovy paste, cheese, pate de foie gras, salami and assorted sausages. Delicious small crackers may be purchased, too. They are made especially for canapes and serve equally as well as toast.

If you use bread for your canapes, prepare it in one of the following ways. Stale white bread is best. But bread in one-quarter-inch slices and then shape as desired with a cutter. An elaborate collection of cutters is not necessary, as a doughnut cutter, about three inches in diameter, or a round top to a metal can may be used. These circles, in turn, can be cut into triangles, halves or strips. These portions of bread may be fried in deep fat and drained on absorbent brown paper, sauted in enough fat to keep them from burning, or toasted to a golden brown in the oven. The finished piece of bread should be nicely browned on both sides. The bread is then ready to be spread with the canape mixture. Be sure that the canapes are made as short a time before serving as possible.

Celery is frequently used to enhance the hors d'oeuvres platter, and is delicious if stuffed with the following mixture:

Stuffed Celery Hors d'Oeuvres.

2 tablespoons Roquefort cheese
4 tablespoons cream cheese
Caviar
Celery stalks.

Cream the Roquefort and cream cheese together. Fill crisp celery stalks 2 inches long with this mixture. Then, with a knife, make a narrow lengthwise trench through the center of each filled celery stalk. Fill the trench with a small quantity of cavier. Then cover it over with some of the cheese mixture, making it rounded. Sprinkle with paprika and serve.

Finnan Haddie Canapes.

1 cup finnan haddie, soaked and flaked
½ tablespoon finely chopped onion
2 chopped mushroom caps
3 tablespoons butter
Salt and cayenne
2 tablespoons flour
2-3 cups thin cream
2 tablespoons grated cheese
2 egg yolk, slightly beaten
Grated cheese
Buttered bread crumbs

Fry onion and mushrooms in butter five minutes. Add flour and gradually, cream. Bring to boiling point, add cheese, egg yolks and finnan haddie. Season and cool. Pile on circular pieces of toast. Sprinkle with cheese and crumbs and bake until brown.

Students Told to Study U. S. Architecture Forms

American students of architecture are being urged to study architectural forms in their own country instead of in Europe. To encourage attention to native buildings, members of the Student Architectural Society at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y., have organized semiannual sightseeing trips to Boston, New York, and other cities. Already the Cosmopolitan Club, Rockefeller Center, and Cornell Medical Center have been studied in New York.

Back in the old days, when Uncle Henry woke to find a pink elephant dancing arm in arm with a green flamingo across the foot of his bed, he moaned for the doctor and swore off welsh rarebit. But now, when Uncle Henry watches that same elephant balancing on his trunk, he just yawns with boredom and goes back to sleep. He's seen things far more strange in John Hix's cartoon,

"Strange As It Seems," in The Washington Post each morning.

And, strange as it seems, each thing John Hix portrays in his daily cartoon is true, and its veracity is backed by documentary evidence. For instance, he can prove to you there is a Santa Claus, that women of an African tribe have lips 20 inches in length, that certain birds have hands and climb trees with them! In fact, we're expecting him to prove any day now that the moon really is made of green cheese . . . for, after following his cartoon for years, we're ready to believe anything.

"Strange As It Seems" is one of the most popular features in The Washington Post, and if you haven't been reading it each morning, we advise you to search for it and find out what strange and unbelievable things there are on this dusty old globe. Old forgotten facts of history, new scientific discoveries, odd things about famous people . . . Hix parades them all before your eyes, and there's always a word of explanation for the skeptical. Then, if you still don't believe him, you can ask for proof and he'll give it. Although most of his statements are in direct conflict with popular belief, he's as sure of his facts as Maxie Baer is of his popularity with the ladies.

You'll find "Strange As It Seems" each morning in your Washington Post, and perhaps you'll appreciate your own toast, bacon and eggs when you are told certain Asians consider roasted butterflies a delicacy, and certainly you won't mind a little Washington drizzle when you learn that, in some far-off corner of the world, it has rained continuously for centuries!

John Hix is our favorite cartoonist of weird things . . . but to us, the strangest thing about "Strange As It Seems" is how he digs up all those odd facts with which to confound us. We like him . . . and so will you when you read his cartoon each day in

Church Society To Give English Fair and Dinner

All Souls' Rector's Aid Completes Plans for Affair Tonight.

The Rector's Aid Society of All Souls' Memorial Episcopal Church has completed arrangements for the fair and dinner to be held tonight in the parish hall.

The delightful setting of the early years of Merrie England will be created, when the lads and lassies danced on the "green;" when strolling jesters entertained, and the Inglenook of the Inns resounded with jest and gay laughter, as the groups of huntsmen in their scarlet coats gathered about the board, and there will be the famous old inns, "The White Horse" and "The Red Lion."

The shoppes, "Ye Olde Cupboard," "Ye Needle Work Shoppe," "Ye Old Curiosity Shoppe," "Ye Sweetmeat Shoppe," will be of special interest.

The hostesses for the evening, who will add to the picture in their gayly colored smocks, will include Mrs. H. H. D. Sterrett, Mrs. Frank S. Bright, Mrs. Hugh T. Nelson, Mrs. Dion Birney, Mrs. Charles D. Drayton, Mrs. Harry C. Grove, Mrs. Walter M. Gilbert, Miss Rebecca McGill, Mrs. J. Rupert Mohler, Mrs. Christopher H. Pope, Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, Mrs. A. E. T. Hansmann, Mrs. John K. Arnold, Miss Eliza Wessells, Miss Fanny Weedon, Mrs. Thomas J. Howerton, Mrs. Katherine Fuqua, Mrs. John C. Koons, Mrs. Norman Underwood, Miss Alice Keyser, Mrs. Herbert Kerslake, Mrs. Howell French, Mrs. John W. Burke, Mrs. Louis S. Greene, Mrs. Gladys Shantz, Miss Neenah Lauls, Mrs. Halbert E. Payne, Mrs. Fred A. Carter, Mrs. Clifford Bangs, Mrs. George C. Pegrim and Mrs. E. A. Rowell.

Sickness Trailed Loss of Fortune In Depression

Sickness and death have been added to the troubles of those who lost their fortunes during the depression, reports to the United States Public Health Service have indicated.

More victims were claimed in the class comfortably off financially during the boom years, but now receiving less than $150 annual income per capita than those who never reached that standard of living even during prosperity.

"The results indicated higher sickness rates among the recent poor class, the families who were comfortable in 1929, but had become poor by 1932," one report said. "Poor as here used indicates an annual per capita family income of less than $150. Those who had been poor the whole four years had the next highest rate and those who had been comfortable through the four years had the lowest sickness rate."

Similar findings were reported in the death rate of the "depression poor," despite a downward trend in the death rate for the general population.

Investigations in child hygiene among school children showed boys weighed about the same in 1933 as in the years 1923-1928. However, there was a slight increase in the number of underweight girls during the latter years of the depression.

Generous Bandit Hands CCC Man Watch to Pawn

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 21 (U.P.) Elery Stroup, CCC camp manager, was sitting with his girl in a parked car when a bandit walked up, pushed a pistol into Stroup's ribs and said:

"It's a hold-up!"

Stroup, who had seen the man approach, had removed all but a nickel from his pocketbook. He offered this to the bandit, explaining:

"That's all I have. I'm just a poor CCC boy."

"Brother, that's just too bad," replied the bandit. "You keep the nickel. You need it more than I do."

Then the bandit pulled his own watch from his pocket.

"Here," he said, "pawn this and get some money for yourself and your girl."

There are two sides

A strong and capable opposition is vital to any country's political health. It is, as the men who formed this nation realized, one of the safeguards of a true democracy. The Herald Tribune has often found itself among the opposition. It has been in opposition to Republican administrations on certain questions. Today it is in sharp disagreement with many of the policies of the present administration.

Its opposition today is not based on the fact that the Herald Tribune is an independent Republican newspaper, but on the belief that certain vital principles of American government are being disregarded and flouted. Its own principles, to which it has held fast since the founding of the Tribune by Horace Greeley in 1841, hold that blind allegiance to any government or any party is the road away from democracy, toward dictatorship.

You may or may not be in agreement with the principles which the Herald Tribune upholds on its editorial page. You should know, however, what is being said and written on both sides of public questions if you are to have a true understanding of what is happening.

You will find among the Herald Tribune's featured writers men who are opposed to its own editorial policies. In its news columns you will find a complete and unbiased record of events, for you to sift and from which you may draw your own conclusions. The Herald Tribune is a complete newspaper, performing all the functions of a newspaper. It strives to present to its readers all the news and every angle of editorial opinion.

Of course this is not the only reason why so many thousands of families read the Herald Tribune. Its ten well-edited Sunday sections include comics, gravure, drama, a book review and a complete magazine in color. Among its weekday features are Mark Sullivan, Walter Lippmann, The Conning Tower, H. T. Webster's cartoon, "Mr. and Mrs." and others.

Try the Herald Tribune for a month. You will find it interesting and exciting fare. You will find that, whether or not you agree with it editorially, you will like it as a newspaper.

Agents Blast Many Stills, Smash Ring

One Plant's Capacity Is More Than 1,000 Gals. Each 24 Hours.

Evidence of Syndicate's Operations Is Given at Harrisonburg.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Rocky Mount, Va., Nov. 21.—Strewn through the ravines of this mountainous area today lay the remains of scores of stills—outfits that were the major production units of the Franklin County whisky ring.

Federal Treasury agents have dynamited more than a hundred stills in the county this year. Unknown numbers are still operating. The Government agents are confident that they can stop them by breaking up a conspiracy that allegedly has corrupted law enforcing agencies. Evidence against the combine is being presented now to a Federal grand jury in Harrisonburg.

A trip to the site of one of the stills showed how the ring had gone in for large scale production of liquor that brought it profit from four States.

The plant had been capable of turning out between 1,000 and 1,500 gallons of whisky in 24 hours. It had been operated with day and night shifts. The main part of the still was a cypress drum holding 1,000 gallons of fermenting mash at a single "charge." Instead of using the customary crude mountain method of building a fire directly under the still, the operators had a modern steam boiler set up in the woods.

Seven "Runs" Daily.

Steam coils ran through the drum to ferment the mash, composed largely of corn meal and sugar. In the last stages of fermentation the mash was peheated by steam coils to save distillation time. It was estimated that seven batches could be run through the still daily.

Trucks hauled the tons of meal and sugar and took away the whisky in loads of 5-gallon tin cans.

Treasury Agent Thomas Bailey and his aids crept through the woods just before dawn one morning to surround the place. One operator was just pulling up in a truck with a helper who was going to work on day shift. Bailey took the prisoners and then disposed of the still with a charge of dynamite.

Deeper in the woods was another still Bailey seized. It was made of copper and had a 200-gallon capacity, the type operated by the small-time mountain moonshiner. Supplies were dragged through the woods to it on rough wooden sledges.

Family Lives Nearby.

One of the alleged operators is a member of a family living nearby. Their cabin is a cabin that "grandpap" built 30 years before. The rooms are unpainted and unpapered. Much of the furniture is homemade. But the home is neat and showed evidence of much sweeping with a bundle of straw that served as a broom.

Just inside the door were two rifles. "Grandpap" boasted that he could still put on his glasses and beat the best of the "young uns."

"We's all honest, hard-working folks, just trying to get along and mind our own business," the old man drawled. "I might shoot a rabbit or a squirrel now and then, but we don't harm nobody."

"Aren't you afraid of the revenue men?"

"No sir; they's nice fellows, and I reckon they's just as good as all other folks."

Then the woman of the family, whose husband had been caught by Bailey, chimed in.

"The trouble was," she laughed, "he wasn't scared of them soon enough."

Roanoke Woman Testifies In Probe

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Mrs. Willie Carter Sharpe, of Roanoke, whose daring exploits in piloting rum-laden automobiles from Franklin County to Roanoke are legend in southwest Virginia, today appeared before the Federal grand jury investigating revenue conspiracy charges in Franklin County.

She only recently was released from the Alderson, W. Va., reformatory, where she served a three-year term for complicity in violating the national prohibition laws.

The first woman witness in the probe, Mrs. Sharpe spent several hours in the grand jury room.

Federal agents say she was noted for her skill in driving high-powered automobiles over the mountain roads of Franklin County, taking curves at 75 miles an hour.

Virginia's Capitol Square

Tax Commissioner Morrisett Tells How Old Dominion Divides Its Tax-Dollar in Operation of Governmental Departments.

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

This is the second installment of a factual survey of the government of Virginia centered at the State capitol in which the writer asks heads of State departments to describe their work and tell why it is necessary.

Richmond, Nov. 21.—Why do I have to pay so much to the State in taxes? What becomes of my money? Is the trend of State taxation in Virginia upward or downward? These were the questions directed at State Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrisett in an interview conducted on behalf of that "invisible man," Mr. Virginius Taxpayer, who wanted to know why and how his State government operated.

The tax commissioner seemed a logical person to consult at the beginning of this inquiry. As head of the State tax department ever since it was formed in the 1927 reorganization of the Virginia government, he has been in a position to keep close watch over both expenditures and revenues of the State.

Former Post.

In addition, he was remembered as former head of the legislative reference bureau, which drew up most of the bills presented to the General Assembly and made available to the legislators a vast amount of information about laws passed or considered in other States.

Settling down in his high-backed chair in his office on the second floor of the State Office Building—a floor which is occupied principally by the State tax department—Mr. Morrisett gave a condensed reply to the first question.

"The amount of taxes you have to pay," he said, "depends on the demands made on the government for services. That is true of national, State and local taxes. If citizens want more done for them, they must pay more."

Branching off then to the second question and linking it up with the first he suggested that what was done with the nearly $45,000,000 expended by the State last year gave an indication of the types of services performed by the State and the extensiveness of these operations.

Not all of this total came from tax funds, the commissioner pointed out, referring to a revenue summary which showed income of about $30,720,000 from various taxes and assessments against citizens or corporations for rights and privileges.

Institutional Revenues.

The difference between this figure and the $45,000,000 spent was made up by institutional revenues of $4,650,000; grants and donations from the Federal Government or other sources amounting to nearly $6,000,000; $640,000 from alcoholic beverage sales and smaller amounts from a variety of other sources not involving tax levies.

"But," he said, "when the citizen does his part in paying taxes, he has a right to expect that the money shall be wisely and economically spent."

Mr. Morrisett referred then to a complicated looking table prepared by Dr. William H. Stauffer, tax department economist, listing under various headings and subdivisions the amounts expended for the various State functions in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, and the proportion these bore to the total amount spent.

Simplifying these figures to bring out their implications more clearly, he continued:

"Out of every dollar the State spent last year, nearly 44 cents was devoted to the construction and maintenance of highways, to continue the great work of bringing together the people of our State into one great family, promoting social and business intercourse and enriching our people, and also providing jobs for thousands of citizens who otherwise would have been unemployed.

Fund for Education

"Approximately 26½ cents was spent for education—to train the minds of the young, to bring about self-realization, to build character, to bring light to those who sit in darkness, to raise the standards of our citizenship.

"Five and a quarter cents was spent for public welfare—to care for defectives and dependents, to heal the sick, to feed the hungry, to make the blind to see, the mute to speak and the deaf to hear, to furnish an asylum for those whose minds have been taken from them.

A cent and a half was paid to the immortal defenders of the South in the great conflict of long ago. Nearly 2 cents was paid to protect society from the activities of criminals. Eight-tenths of a cent was spent for the advancement of agriculture as a basic industry, the prosperity of which is essential to the prosperity of us all. Three cents was spent to pay interest on and retire the State debt at maturity."

Public Health Money.

He pointed out also that nearly 2 cents was spent to protect the public health, to limit disease and prevent illness; two-thirds of a cent was spent to carry on executive functions of the Government; handling its finances in orderly fashion cost a little less than 2 cents out of each revenue dollar and assessing and collecting revenue took another eight-tenths of a cent.

Paying the judiciary took eight-tenths of another cent and the State gave back to localities for use on projects other than roads two-thirds of a cent. About 2 2-3 cents was distributed among the miscellaneous group of functions not so easily classified and the newly formed alcoholic beverage control board, although it brought into the State treasury revenue from a new source, also figured on the expenditure side of the ledger, costing nearly 2½ cents out of each of last year's dollars.

Last year, too, a little more than 5 cents out of each dollar was spent for conservation and development, but Mr. Morrisett explained that this was not a normal figure since it included payment for Shenandoah National Park land, an expense peculiar to this year, much of the cost of which was borne by the Federal Government, but handled through the State treasury.

He smilingly passed on to Mr. Virginius taxpayer the question of deciding which of the State services mentioned he would be willing to have discontinued in order to lighten his tax burden.

Fraud Trial Again Faced By Coblentz

Maryland Wins Appeal Against President of Closed Bank.

Baltimore Court Upset as Judges Split in 3-1 Opinion.

Annapolis, Nov. 21 (AP).—The court of appeals today reversed the judgment of the criminal court of Baltimore, which quashed an indictment of fraudulent corporate misrepresentation against Emory L. Coblentz, as president of the defunct Central Trust Co. of Maryland, and remanded the case for trial.

Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond filed the opinion of the appellate court, with Judges T. Scott Offutt and D. Lindley Sloan concurring.

Indicted on 20 Counts.

Coblentz, State Senator from Frederick County, was indicted by a Howard County grand jury on 20 counts last year, the case was removed to the Baltimore court, where, after a hearing, Judges George Solter and Eli Frank sustained a defense demurrer, quashed the indictment and freed the defendant. The State appealed.

The indictment, in general, charged that Coblentz, as president of the trust company, signed certain public statements as to the condition of the bank; that the statements were untrue, and that he "fraudulently" signed them.

Charges Enumerated.

Five of the counts charge that Coblentz fraudulently signed or assented to the statements with a view of enhancing the market value of the stock and corporate obligations of the bank. Five make the same charge with specifications of items "falsely stated." Five charge that the fraudulent signing or assent was the ulterior purpose of procuring a transfer and assignment of property of another trust company when the defendant knew that the Central Trust Co. could not pay in full, and five are the same as the third group, except that specifications of "false items" are added. Some of the counts charge that the statements were signed, some that they were assented to, and some of the latter specify the manner of assenting.

Washington's Grist Mill Is Restored

General view of the old grist mill used by George Washington, near Mount Vernon, Va., which has been restored by the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission.

Washington's Grist Mill to Be Rebuilt at Dogue Creek, Va.

The most famous grist mill in America—perhaps in the world—has been rescued from oblivion and restored exactly as it was a century and a quarter ago by the Virginia Commission on Conservation and Development. It is George Washington's old mill on Dogue Creek, near Mount Vernon.

In front of the mill towers an ancient sycamore. This, too, belongs to history. Its age and location mark it as the tree to which the first President tethered his horse when he came to visit his Dogue Creek industries. Tree surgeons have come to minister to it in its declining years. It still provides grateful shade in summer and its gold and brown and russet leaves delight the eye in middle and late autumn.

Has "Pitch-Back" Wheel.

The restored mill is a stone structure three and a half stories high, with an inside wheel and an arch covering the outlet to the tail-race. The wheel measures 16 feet in diameter by approximately 4 feet in width, and is of the breast or "pitch-back" type, in which the water strikes the wheel several feet below the top, rotating it in the direction of the forebay as in an undershot wheel. A short distance away on the brow of the hill the miller's house—a small frame structure—has been rebuilt on its original foundation.

Reconstruction of the mill constitutes one of the most interesting chapters in the history of the Conservation and Development Commission. It involved a lengthy search among Washington's letters and papers for any references to the mill property that might throw light on its construction or history. Numerous old mills in this and other States were visited and examined and mill construction of the Revolutionary era was closely studied.

A crude sketch of the Dogue Creek mill, drawn by an artist from memory, was found in the possession of an old resident, and stones that had been removed from the mill wall were located in the community. From all these sources and from excavations at the mill site what is believed to have been the exact plan of the mill was reconstructed. The research and reconstruction work were carried out under the direction of R. E. Burson, State park director for the Conservation and Development Commission.

The excavations at the mill site were made under the supervision of geological and archeological experts, and later were submitted to two eminent authorities on mill construction. The foundations of the mill were found practically intact beneath the surface of the ground. The ground floor, the wheel pit, the gear pit, the forebay and the tail race were easily traced. A section of the wheel itself was found imbedded in the earth of the wheel pit along with other mechanical appurtenances. The dimensions of the wheel and other parts were easily determined and the head of water was found to have been approximately 13.5 feet.

Was Prerevolution Type.

It became evident to the commission's investigators that the Dogue Creek Mill conformed to a standard of construction that was in use prior to and during the Revolutionary period. This type of construction was found aptly described in a little volume entitled "Oliver Evans' Miller's Guide," a copy of which is known to have been in Washington's possession. All of the physical features found at the mill site confirmed the belief that Washington followed this plan when he rebuilt the mill in 1770 and again when he reconstructed the mill race in 1795.

A mill of this identical type, constructed in 1818, was found on the property of the State Fish Hatchery in Warren County, Va., near the entrance to Powell's Fort Valley. Its exact conformity to the type, even in point of measurements, led to the belief that it was indeed a replica of the Dogue Creek mill. This mill was donated by the State Commission on Game and Inland Fisheries, and was carefully dismantled and removed to the Dogue Creek site. The mill walls had already been restored with stone, donated by Henry Ford, from Washington's old quarry on Aquia Creek.

Florida Told Of Nice Aim To Help Idle

Governor-Elect Hopes Business Will Be Able to Relieve U. S.

Maryland Financially in 'Enviable Position,' He Asserts.

Miami, Fla., Nov. 21 (AP).—Harry W. Nice, third Republican to be elected Governor of Maryland in the last 100 years, arrived here by steamer today for a post-election vacation, "confident that we're moving out of the depression and hopeful that business will be able to relieve the Government by absorbing unemployment."

City officials extended a welcome to the visitor, who chatted briefly with them and newspapermen before motoring to a hotel.

"You may say," commented Governor-elect Nice, "that in view of the results of the recent election, Maryland has a wonderful future." He added, however, that every effort of his administration would be bent toward relieving unemployment.

"Maryland, generally speaking," he said, "finds itself in much the same position as other States, although I believe that financially we are in an enviable position. Our State bonds are selling at 109 and our municipals at 112.

"The next four years will be trying and we must curtail expenses wherever possible."

The newly elected chief executive explained, however, that reduction of relief rolls is not contemplated, "for this can not be done until we are assured that individual business will absorb unemployment."

He made no comment on the NRA, but said he strongly approves of the "alphabet programs which have helped relieve unemployment."

In his party were his wife, State Senator and Mrs. Harry O. Levin, Mrs. Thomas Ewald, of Baltimore; James O'Donnell, of the Baltimore Sun; M. E. Katz, of the Baltimore State Police, and Charles M. Green, of Baltimore.

Nice will stay here for a week, but his wife and their son, Harry W. Nice, jr., will remain longer.

Gilbert Miller Will Offer Two Brilliant Stars

Titles Are Not Announced; 'Valley Forge' Success; Chatter of Theater.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Instead of two dark pre-Christmas weeks, following the engagement of Walter Connolly and Ernest Treux in "Gather Ye Rosebuds," the week of December 3 at the National, patrons of the living theater in Washington will be privileged to enjoy two premieres of noteworthy distinction, it was announced to this department yesterday.

Gilbert Miller, a producer active on both sides of the Atlantic, the week of December 10 will present the Capital's own native star, Ina Claire, in a new play, the title of which has not as yet been divulged. Presumably, it will not be untouched by the light hand of comedy, since Miss Claire generally is recognized as the foremost of the native comediennes.

In the following week, December 17, Mr. Miller will present Leslie Howard, one of the most brilliant of the Anglo-American favorites, in another first-time-on-any-stage, of which the title, for the time being, also is kept secret.

Gives Season Impetus.

This declaration on the part of one of the American theater's most sagacious and most successful producers gives the immediately impending weeks an impetus in interest, and a fillip, in sharp contrast with the doleful outlook of closed doors and darkened marquees.

Whatever the plays that have been been selected by Mr. Miller to test the talents of two such skillful players as Miss Claire and Mr. Howard, it may be relied upon that they will be of a quality commensurate with the proved ability of the stars who have been nominated to interpret them.

It is the foregone conclusion, also, that the supporting casts and productions will be such as to reflect credit upon a producer whose judgment seldom has been faulty and whose taste ever ha. been above reproach.

Pendulum Swings Back.

There are other aspects of interest attaching to this unexpected turn of events from the viewpoint of the lover of the traditional theater. It seems to mark a further swing of the pendulum in the direction of the so-called legitimate theater and away from the studios of the cinema.

Last season considerable to-do was occasioned by the return to the stage from the screen in a single comedy of so many well-known film personalities as Roland Young, Laura Hope Crews, Elizabeth Patterson and Frances Fuller. The next three weeks at the National will at least equal that record.

In "Gather Ye Rosebuds," as already made known, Walter Connolly and Ernest Truex have the costellar roles—both have been conspicuously active before the cameras and microphones. Ina Claire, whom Mr. Miller is bringing to her home town for a new adventure behind the footlights, not only was a star of Hollywood—in such things as "The Royal Family," for example—but even went so far in her enthusiasm for the film colony as to become the wife of Jack Gilbert. Leslie Howard, of course, has been much more on the screen of late than upon the boards of any stage.

Thus the movement, in such contrast to the dark days of the depression, seems to have set in toward the stage and away from pictures. Perhaps it is all only a fulfillment of the theory Helen Hayes advanced many months ago that the stage-bred actor owes it to the theater to keep the stage alive by devoting at least half of his time to it.

Producers Wake Up.

Perhaps even more important to Washington than all this is the fact that Mr. Miller's decision to open his two new plays here and a recent intimation that Max Gordon has in contemplation an identical procedure indicates a belated awakening on the part of the producers to the consciousness that Washington right now is the best theater town in the United States outside of New York.

This I believe to be the fact. There is no other city in which plays are presented in such uninterrupted succession, given such respectful attention or more honestly appraised by both press and public.

The record books, the press clippings and the assiduous argument of Manager Stephen E. Cochran of the National, backed up by this material and tangible evidence, bear this out and promise to restore the National Capital to the preeminent "try-out" city it used to be back in the days of the late David Belasco and the other leading producers of his time.

To run the measure over, it is even being bruited about that despite the hoodoo that is supposed to haunt the week, a big musical show is to be brought here for the week of December 24. Since Chirstmas comes on a day as early in the week as Tuesday, this might not be so hazardous as it sounds to those who instinctively agree with Al Jolson that the worst three weeks in the year are Christmas Week, Holy Week and St. Louis!

"Valley Forge" Clicks.

There is a great cascade of enthusiasm gushing out of Pittsburgh over the fine accomplishment of Maxwell Anderson, the author, and Philip Merivale, the star, in making of "Valley Forge," Mr. Anderson's new play coming to the National next Monday night, so tremendously moving and so accurate a reflection of one of the most critical periods in American history.

A drama which might so easily have been made a sentimental exemplification of an already sufficiently glorified figure is said to deal with George Washington and his times with intense and inescapable realism. Comedy, pathos, tragedy, all are there, to be sure, but under the deft treatment of the author so blended as to humanize rather than idealize all that enters into the fabric and pattern of the play.

George Seibel, writing in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, has this to say: "It is the finest historical portrait Anderson has yet painted, and Merivale brings it to life. Here was acting in the grand tradition, with patient elaboration of every detail, without strutting or heroics, subtle now, and again tremendous, all the time alive and human. Little would seem lacking to make this a guild masterpiece."

Those are words of high praise which I trust Washington will find it not only possible but inevitable to reiterate next Monday night—or some others just as good!

And who should drop into town yesterday for a visit of a few days but Tom Olsen. And who, you ask, is Tom Olsen? My goodness, what a short memory you have Tom Olsen is the genial gentleman who, a few years back, when Hardie Meakin was mnager of the then unhyphenated Fox Theater, served that cathedral of the celluloids in the capacity of director of advertising and publicity—a post which since has been occupied by Edgar Waite, Eddie Gilmore, Lou Brown and other pundits of the press sheets and paste pots. Tom, these past few years, I believe, has been exercising his talents in Seattle, Wash., his old home town. But we'll know a great deal more about that after I've seen him this afternoon for an old-time gabfest.

The Guild Opens.

The first production of their 1934-35 season, the Drama Guild of Washington is presenting "Ladies of The Jury," a comedy which served as a successful vehicle for Mrs. Fiske several years ago, tonight and tomorrow night.

Grace Peters Johnson, who is well-known in Washington for her professional as well as her amateur dramatic activities, will play the leading role.

Mrs. Johnson, after playing in Washington with the old Poli and Columbia Stock Companies, in 1914 joined the company of Mme. Olga ePtrova, then ftamous on stage and screen.

Later, after season in vaudeville and stock engagements in Denver and Milwaukee, Mrs. Johnson joined the Cohan and Harris force, playing with Pauline Lord for two seasons in Elmer Rice's sensational "On Trial."

With Taylor Holmes.

For two seasons, she supported Taylor Holmes in "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," and then, after a season on the road under the management of Oliver Morosco, was engaged by Claire Kummer to create the part of "Aunt Jane," supporting Roland Young in "Rollo's Wild Oat."

Harold Weinberger, who directed several of the Roadside Theater plays this summer, is directing "Ladies of the Jury."

The sets are being designed and executed by Edith Allen, who was designer and technician for all of the Roadside Theater productions this summer.

We are being widely and vigorously chided for having attributed one of the performances in Walter Hampden's production of "Richelieu" in Tuesday's review to an actor who met a tragic death in Richmond, Va., last week. Not in extenuation but merely in explanation, it may be said that the notice of the death of Mr. Dallas Anderson did not meet these eyes, no program corrections had been made or changes in cast announced from the stages, so, not having had the pleasure of a previous acquaintanceship with Mr. Anderson's talents, it was assumed that it was he, as the program said, who played the king. The following printed program corrections have since been made: In "Richelieu," Louis III, Franklin Salisbury; Duran, Richard Edward Bowler. In "Richard III," Edward IV, Wyman Kane. In "Hamlet," Horatio, Richard Edward Bowler. In "Macbeth," Banquo, Richard Edward Bowler; a doctor, Franklin Salisbury.

To Appear Here in New Play

When "Valley Forge," the new drama of George Washington and the Revolution, by Maxwell Anderson, author of "Mary of Scotland" and the Pulitzer prize-winning "Both Your Houses," comes to the National Theater Monday night, Ruth Weston, pictured above, will be seen in the principal feminine role. The play, which opened in Pittsburgh on Monday night, is reported to continue Mr. Anderson's impressive record of hits.

Two-thirds of "Bartlett's Familiar uotations" were recited on the stage of the National Theater for fully three hours last evening, and because those that were most familiar came from the tongue of Mr. Walter Hampden, the occasion was enjoyable. The long and gloomy, yet withal witty, play, "Hamlet," was for the most part admirably presented by this accomplished player and his associates. The theater was filled with an appreciative, if rather croupy, audience.

It was apparent to many of those present that even the excellent acting of Mr. Hampden did not always raise "Hamlet" to those heights of dramatic excellence which, through years of ardent propaganda on the part of the professorial gentry, we have been led to believe it occupies. Some of it, it is obvious, might well have stood the blue pencil. For instance, that long and wordy scene wherein Queen Gertrude eventually leads up to the already disclosed news that poor Ophelia had drowned herself. However, quibbling with Shakespeare is futile. Like Yorick, he has no chance to answer back. And when he is presented by Mr. Hampden it is Shakespear in full—or not at all.

Hampton's Perfect Diction.

What was most impressive about the production was the completely understandable diction of Mr. Hampden, coupled with a tender, humorous and sympathetic portrayal of the mad Dane. He acted with uncommon restraint, turning the lines, which time has made all too familiar, into newly spoken phrases that neither jarred nor were too little emphasized. To say, "Alas poor Yorick" without feeling self-conscious—and showing it—must, after all, be the test of a good Shakespearian actor.

Unfortunately, Mr. Hampden feels Shakespeare so deeply that, to make the play an entity, he needs, in certain instances, somewhat more melodius support than he is given. The flat voice of Ernest Rowan, who as King Claudius, at times emulated the speed of a Floyd Gibbons, was a little disconcerting. However the presence of P. J. Kelly as the boresome septagenarian, Polonius, made up for the deficiencies noticeable elsewhere. His ancient mannerisms, his understanding of his chore, and his deliberateness of speech were all to the advantage of the play. Richard Edward Bowler, as Horatio, was the friend of Hamlet to thee nd, acting his part well. Of the rest of the cast the well-tried adjective of adequate might be applied with justice.

Simplicity of Settings.

As is always the case, and naturally, it was the part of Hamlet upon which all eyes and ears were trained. A word should be spoken for the delightful underemphasis which Mr. Hampden placed upon this part. He was the gloomy madman, the irresponsible prince, calculating at times, always aware of his nobility, nevertheless brought a simplicity to the stage that was refreshing. He was never boisterou; he was always in command of himself, and his uncanny ability to bring a contemporaeity to phrases that have been said so many thousands of times in the last 300 years was something to be remembered.

There are many who believe that Shakespare can only be acceptable if done with lavishness. Others believe that all the trappings should be left out, so that an approximation of the seventeenth-century stage at the Globe might be captured.

r. Hampden, in "Hamlet" at least, plays the middle ground. With the colorful aid of r. Claude Bragdon the sttings of the play are bright but, as they say, not gaudy. And while the constant shifting of scenery only adds to the time element, making the last bus to the suburb a precarious venture, the audience, accustomed to its Shakespeare in this manner, found that the scenery helped make the evening even more delightful.

Lawyer Opposes Ousting Saunders

Richmond, Va., Nov. 21 (AP).—Harry M. Smith, jr., widely known attorney in criminal cases, appeared as a defense witness today in the ouster trial of City Sergeant John G. Saunders, and described him as the most efficient officer Richmond has had in this post during the last half century.

Among other character witnesses who testified as to their high regard for the judgment and reputation of the defendant, whose removal from office was recommended by a special grand jury investigating the escape of Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, gangster murderers, were Dr. Carey Montague. city missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Col. John F. O'Grady, secretary-treasurer of John T. Wilson & Co.; John C. Goode, commissioner of revenue, and Judge Ernest H. Wells, of Hustings court, part 2.

Further witnesses are to be called tomorrow, but it is expected the defense will rest its case before noon, and after instructions from Judge Don P. Halsey and closing arguments, the case will reach the jury sometime during the afternoon.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker.

WARNINGS from the Traffic Bureau this week that enforcement of parking restrictions would be tightened, have spurred the Association for Adequate Parking Facilities into renewed action for relief for harassed Federal employe motorists.

BAKER.

Solution to the parking and traffic congestion problem downtown, Col. D. E. McQueary, Veterans' Administration, association president, points out, is for the Government to provide parking space. This space, he holds, feasibly can be parking lots, underground or surface garages, all of which could be constructed with PWA funds on a self-liquidating basis without a cent of cost to taxpayers.

Col. McQueary has started his speaking campaign and will fill as many engagements possible until Congress convenes, when he will lead the fight to the Capitol. He invites all individuals, employe organizations and citizens' associations to join in the campaign, by writing him in care of the Federal Diary, The Washington Post, or to 3842 Windom place northwest.

"The congested area has been extended so far out from the Government building section that a Federal employe driving to his work has to park his car almost a mile away and then walk to his office or else disobey an official parking sign and be arrested by a traffic officer for the violation," Col. McQueary said last night.

"The up-to-date big stores of the large cities are providing parking space for their customers, building contractors of immense buildings are providing parking space for their employes even down to the unskilled laborer," the parking crusader continued.

"There is no reason the Government should not be abreast of the times in taking care of this dire condition of its helpers."

J. C. Diamond (F), association vice president, is reported making plans to participate in the speaking campaign actively.

The Patent Office Society announces its semiannual dance will be given at the Roosevelt Hotel on December 1.

Emmett R. Carroll, Veterans Administration, calls attention to the meeting of Lodge No. 17, American Federation of Government Employes, tonight at the Ambassador Hotel. Mr. Carroll, who is president of the lodge, urges each member to cooperate in gathering toys and contributions throughout the Arlington Building for The Washington Post Toy Fund.

Epidemic of Indorsitis.

Have you heard of the plague
That has hit Capitol Hill?
It's a germ called "Indorsitis"—
And it's making everyone ill.
Congress is running a fever,
As constituents thickly swarm;
Traveling from near and far—
From the city and the farm.

Each person craves indorsement
For a job that can not exist;
And the shortest road to peace
Is for Congress not to resist.
So in helpless desperation,
Members write these letters fine;
Sometimes hundreds to an office,
Flowing freely as French wine.

One million applications
Are haunting the files, it seems,
And most are doomed to die
Like bright, inflated dreams.
The departments are having chills
And wish the plague would pass,
Yet constituents claim officials
Demand this congressional gas.

Jupiter's Spot Bared as Vast Ammonia Isle

30,000-Mile-Long World of Frozen Chemical Floats on Hydrocarbon Sea.

Flagstaff, Ariz., Nov. 21 (AP).—An island of solid, frozen ammonia, floating on a hydrocarbon sea, is the new explanation of the famous red spot on the giant planet, Jupiter, given by astronomers.

The red spot, 30,000 miles long, 7,800 wide, when first seen in 1878, is today rounder than then, but just as vast. There has been no doubt that it was some sort of an island, for in the 56 years it has floated—some 20,000 miles east and west and several thousand north and south.

The evidence for the reality of this grotesque sort of world on Jupiter is supplied by the known intense cold there and the spectroscope, which informs astro-physicists of the nature of the substances that reflect sunlight from Jupiter.

This evidence is set forth by Dr. V. M. Slipher, of the Lowell Observatory here, and A. Adel, of the University of Michigan, in the Physical Review. At Michigan, a giant tube was set up to be filled with gas and to stimulate the depth of Jupiter's atmosphere and the immense pull of gravity upon it. In the Michigan tube the gas was compressed to 45 times that of the earth's atmospheric weight.

The gases thought to form Jupiter's atmosphere were put in the tube. The spectroscope showed they imitated in tell-tale fashion the light reflected from Jupiter's atmosphere.

The reading confirmed the beliefs that Jupiter's air is virtually all coal damp, or methane, also known on earth as marsh gas.

They led the scientists to conclude that there are other hydrocarbons below the methane atmosphere and to state:

"The unanchored motion of Jupiter's great red spot suggests that it is an island of solid hydrocarbon, or ammonia, floating in a vast hydrocarbon ocean as extensive as the planet's surface itself."

New Plays and Films Are Not Only Prospect

Lecture and Burlesk Hits and Movie House Stage Shows Also Lure.

One of the important events of the season will be celebrated in the National Theater next week, when the Theater Guild will present Maxwell Anderson's new play of "Valley Forge," with Philip Merivale and Ruth Weston in the principal roles.

This latest work from the pen of the author of "Elizabeth, the Queen," "Mary of Scotland" and the Pulitzer prize winner, "Both Your Houses," opened in Pittsburgh Monday night and was acclaimed a success by the Pittsburgh press. Playing its second week in Washington, it will proceed then directly to Broadway.

"Valley Forge" is a drama of George Washington and the Revolution, and, in addition to those mentioned includes in its cast such well-known players as Reginald Mason, Stanley Ridges, George Coulouris, Alan Bunce, Florence Gerald, Erskine Sanford, Grover Burgess, Harland Tucker and a considerable list of others.

The play has been staged by John Houseman and the author, with costumes and settings by Kate Drain Lawson.

There will be the customary Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Greta Garbo, probably the most notable artiste of the cinema, will take possession of the screen at Loew's Palace Theater on Friday in "The Painted Veil," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's ad. ptation of the story of the same name by W. Somerset Maugham. In this subject, the star is said to reveal a new facet of her art and offer a portrayal unlike any other of the 19-odd in which she has been seen. The leading male roles are played by Herbert Marshall, last seen with Constance Bennett in "Outcast Lady," and George Brent. Others in the cast are Jean Hersholt, Katherine Alexander, Beulah Bondi, Warner Oland and Forrester Harvey. The action takes place in a cholera-plagued province in the interior of China. Richard Boleslavsky directed. Newsreel, an abbreviated screen musical comedy and an oddity, "Rugby" will complete the program.

For its Thanksgiving week attraction, opening tomorrow, the Warner Brothers Earle Theater announces as the major screen feature that much heralded military-musical, "Flirtation Walk," with Powell, Ruby Keeler and Pat O'Brien the featured members of the cast. The story is an engrossing one of army romance with its locale extending from Hawaii to West Point. Special musical numbers have been written for this production—all nicely within the range and capabilities of the Powell voice—which was directed by Frank Borzage, one of the foremost of his craft. For its principal stage attraction, the Earle has booked the "Poet Prince" of radio fame, Anthony Frome, in person, who will sing songs that he has made famous over the air. Others on the bill will include Johnny Woods, the radio ballyhooligan; Irene Vermillion with hte Dart Ensemble, in a dance revue, and the Three Jackson Boys. Orchestral contributions, newsreel and special holiday features will complete the program.

Following the current engagement of Charles Boyer and Loretta Young in the Hungarian operetta, "Caravan," at RKO-Keith's, the feature picture at the Fifteenth street house will be "Wednesday's Child," in which the foremost roles are portrayed by Karen Morley, Edward Arnold, Frankie Thomas and Shirley Grey. It is rumored that the inaugural of this subject may be celebrated by the end of the current week in order to make it possible to present "Anne of Green Gables," said to be another "Little Women," on Thanksgiving Day. In the meantime, "Caravan" remains an excellent film musical, which suffers only from lack of adequate application of the pruning knife.

Ketti Gallian, one of the cinema's newly discovered beauties, makes her screen debut opposite Spencer Tracy in "Marie Galante," a story of tempestuous love in the world's danger zone, opening as foremost screen attraction at Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow. The supporting cast is led by Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan, Ziegfried Rumann, Jay C. Flippen, Leslie Fenton, Arthur Byron and Stepin Fetchit. The stage portion of the entertainment will be led by that facile young singing comedian, George Jessel, seen on the same rostrum not so long ago with Norma Talmadge, who will be surrounded by Raymond Baird, youthful musical marvel; Kay Picture, in novelty dances; Shirley Ross, in popular melodies; the Bartell Hurst Foursome and the 16 Danny Dare Girls. News events and Phil Lampkin's orchestral contributions will complete the bill.

"Madam Du Barry," that famous figure in French history who paid the penalty of the guillotine for her influence over Louis XV and his court, will come to life again on the screen of the Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theater, where once before she trod in triumph in "Passion," in the person of Pola Negri. In the present "Du Barry," the title role is taken by that eminent beauty, Dolores Del Rio, with the role of the King intrusted to Reginald Owen. Victor Jory, Osgood Perkins—as Richlieu—Verree Teasdale and Anita Louise lead the supporting ensemble. This is one of the Warner Brothers' most gorgeous productions and should enlist the keenest interest of all lovers of romantic costume drama. Full newsreel and varied short subjects will round out the program.

• • • •

Beginning tomorrow, that magnificent elaboration of "The Merry Widow," directed by Ernst Lubitsch for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with Jeanette MacDonald and Maurice Chevalier in the costellar roles of Sonia and Prince Danilo, will take up its abode on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater to continue the triumph it has already scored on F street at the Palace. Una Merkel, George Barbier, Edward Everett Horton and others lead the supporting ensemble which, seemingly runs into the thousands. News events and added short subjects comprise the supplementaries.

• • • •

On Sunday afternoon at 3, Burton Holmes and his colorful travel revues will continue their interesting course at the National Theater. Mr. Holmes has chosen as his subject matter of the second of his globe-trotting exploits to be disclosed to Washintgon audiences this season, "London and Rural England." This tour is scheduled to start from Southampton and proceed through Sussex, Stonehenge, Oxford, Cambridge, an extensive countryside, filled with historic legend, and thence to present-day London. Mr. Holmes' intimate and fluent talks are profusely illustrated with both "still" and motion pictures, in both black-and-white and color.

The Gayety Theater will offer as its Thanksgiving burlesque unit, beginning with Sunday matinee, the newly formed organization of comedians, singers and dancers, known as the "Dizzy Dames." Prominent among the principals are Margie Lee, Diana Rowland, Marie Evans, Agnes Nichols, Kay Johnson, Joe Devlin, Jack Montague and Frank Renny. A chorus of 16, of course, supports the principals.

In Wake of Jannings and Negri

It is an interesting coincidence that Reginald Owen and Dolores Del Rio, pictured above, will appear in the pivotal roles of "Du Barry" on the screen of the Metropolitan Theater, beginning Friday. It was on the same screen that Emil Jannings and Pola Negri first appeared before Washington audiences in "Passion," Ernst Lubitsch's film version of the same story, a decade ago. "Passion" was a hit that ran to two weeks of capacity business at advanced prices of admission.

Straight From the Studios

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollwood, Nov. 21.—When gangsters meet (or are there any these days?) the heat is generally turned on full blast. And—though they have put their film racketeering days far behind them (presumably)—something should really happen if Edward G. Robinson and James Cagney should ever get together in a picture. Robinson himself has suggested the idea once or twice as having good co-starring possibilities, and Cagney, although not heard from, is probably not averse to the plan.

EDWARD G. ROBINSON.

The upshot is that it may see fulfillment in the Hoover Dam story, "Back Fire," which is planned by Warner Brothers. This is expected to go into production fairly soon. Cagney has already been announced for the film, and now there is a likelihood that Robinson will play in it.

Both gained fame by playing hard-boiled, fast-shooting types during the reign of the gangster films, but their paths never crossed on the screen during that time. Robinson was in "Little Caesar," and Cagney in "Public Enemy," among the more notable movies of that time.

The latest films in which Cagney has played have sparkled at the box-office, namely, "Here Comes the Navy" and "St. Louis Kid," just released. He is finishing up work in "Devil Dogs of the Air," with Pat O'Brien.

McCrea in Musical.

Joel McCrea's retirement from the cast of "Caprice Espagnole," the Marlene Dietrich-Josef Von Sternberg production, has left the way clear for him to fill an assignment for which he is very much wanted—namely, the "straight" leading role in "Roberta." Fred Astaire is, of course, the musical and dancing lead. McCrea would play the American football player who falls heir to the Parisian gown shop. It is also possible that the engagement will lead to McCrea's being resigned by RKO under term contract at an advanced figure.

Meanwhile, the Cuban-American, Cesar Romero, seems to be pretty well settled on for the lead in the Dietrich picture. It will be only about his fourth or fifth film, and second leading role.

"Romance of Manhattan" Previewed on Coast.

A clever finish in which character actors have a comedy holiday, and the police force comes to the rescue, measurably increases the entertainment provided by the picture, "Romance of Manhattan," which stars Francis Lederer and Ginger Rogers.

Previewed, this production raced to the goal line on power generated by laughs. It's a human story in essence, this sketch of a Czechoslovagian immigrant who is in America without proper permit from the immigration authorities. He manages actually to stay by swimming from the boat on which he is being deported—a fairly far-fetched start to the narrative.

The heroine is working in the show business, and taking care of a kid brother. She aids Lederer, and then Lederer assists her, but this mutual help arrangement is misunderstood by welfare authorities. The young brother is taken away to be placed in an institution, and about the same time the immigrant hero falls into the clutches of a shyster lawyer who turns him in as an undesired alien. A real "Lady for a Day" finish has been contrived to clear up the complexities.

The picture presents Lederer in the most everyday role he has yet played on the screen, and should, therefore, help to establish him with the more than average audience. He gives a less manneristic portrayal than in "Man of Two Worlds" and "Pursuit of Happiness," though retaining his individuality. But the feature is not just his right metier, despite it offers him, in many ways, his best opportunities. Miss Rogers carries out her part sympathetically. The initial love scene is badly handled. J. Farrell MacDonald and Sidney Toler are excellent.

The boy, Jimmy Butler, is very good. The film will please a vast majority.

Picture Pageant In Review.

Franchot Tone will probably play opposite Dolores Del Rio in the picture, "In Caliente." This will be his second devoir for Warner Brothers. The first was "Gentlemen are Born," a story about college men.

Harvey Stephens, who looks unlike a villain, but who likes to play heavies, has been selected to appear in "Town Talk" with Constance Bennett and Clark Gable, the picture in which la Bennett appears as a society girl who goes to work on a newspaper. Stephens clicked in "Evelyn Prentice."

William Anthony McGuire is in agony, it seems, because he can not locate a copy of the song, "Won't You Come and Play Wiz Me?" He has the words of the Anna Held song, but not the music. It is understood he plans to use it in "The Great Ziegfeld."

G. P. Huntley, New York stage actor, has been engaged to appear in "Becky Sharp," with Miriam Hopkins. This color feature will start early in December.

Gene Fowler has been engaged to adapt "Sutter's Gold" for Universal. Henry Hull is still being mentioned for the stellar part in this film, and Charles Bickford will play in it.

Aid to Shipping Sought in Form Of Flat Subsidy

Present Plan of Assisting Air Lines Favored by Officials.

(Associated Press.)

A flat subsidy, called by that name, was disclosed yesterday to be what Government officials contemplate for submission to President Roosevelt for the future of the American merchant marine.

At the same time there is a strong desire among them for retention of the present plan of aiding aviation through air-mail contracts

A departmental committee is working on recommendations as to the policy that should be adopted for the merchant marine. Another presidential commission is studying air transportation.

Out of the ocean mail study is evolving a plan, which President Roosevelt favors, for abandoning the present indirect subsidy to the merchant marine through ocean-mail contracts.

In its place would be substituted flat gifts of Government money, based on assurance that the companies would supply good service and would keep their lines and their ships abreast of the equipment of any foreign lines.

The presidential aviation committee is still immersed in its study. Before it is the strong recommendation of the Postoffice Department that the present form of air-mail subsidy be retained.

Auto Tag Loss Facing 16,700

Warning Given to Owners Who Failed to Get 1935 Applications.

Approximately 16,700 automobile owners in the District have not yet received application blanks for tags for the coming year, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer announced yesterday.

These, he pointed out, either are persons whose blanks were returned because of incorrect addresses, or against whom warrants have been issued for violations.

Mr. Van Duzer issued a warning that those who have not received blanks are in danger of failing to get 1935 tags unless they appear immediately at the office of the director of traffic in the Ford Building, 451 Pennsylvania avenue. Application blanks already have been mailed to those entitled to receive them, Mr. Van Duzer pointed out.

About 200 of the original 2,000 persons against whom warrants were outstanding when the first application blanks were mailed have appeared to put up the necessary collateral and obtain the release of their blanks. Approximately 15,000 applications are awaiting correct addresses.

Issuance of tags through the director's headquarters will begin Monday morning. Tags may be used after December 15.

Car Purchase Is Seen As Clew in Hold-up

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Police today were investigating the purchase of an automobile, the description of which tallied with that used to hold up two parked couples here Sunday night.

Two colored men were reported to have held up Wallace Jones and his woman companion on the King's highway, and later to have accosted Mike Bebiski, a Quatnico marine, and a woman companion in the city fair grounds.

Coach Faber Confident Of Md.

Old Line Mentor Has Seen G. U.; Predicts Saverine Will Play.

Mixing Biology With Football; Believes in His Grid Charges.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE professor was sitting on a locker room bench studiously perusing a notebook. All about him were the Maryland football players, laughing, shouting and disturbing the peace in general. But the professor seemed not to mind. I doubt if he knew they were in the same room.

He thumbed each page carefully, peering intently at the diagrams as he turned them up, mentally noting the more important items inscribed. Now the professor, if you don't know, is Jack Faber, whose cherubic countenance belies his position as head coach of the Terrapins.

"Some new plays for Georgetown?" we inquired.

He paid not the slightest attention but went right on with his perusing, emitting a low, studious "Hmm," every now and then, and thumbing more pages.

Only Biology Book.

He had "hmmed" several minutes before we coughed politely, accidentally knocked over a waste basket and knocked loudly on a locker. He glanced up casually, then motioned us to a seat beside him, but did not stop reading. It must be important football dope, we thought.

We looked over his shoulder and stole a glance, inside stuff—Maryland's strategy for the big Georgetown game. Well, it was important stuff. It was a notebook on biology. It seems that the professor is giving his pupils an examination tomorrow.

But Faber is taking the Georgetown game seriously. He admitted it with an abrupt, "Sure, we take 'em all seriously; why not Georgetown?"

What did he think about the Hoyas?

"A good team, mister; plenty good. They are, I think, one of the finest coached teams I've seen all season. Mackert, Heagy, Woods and myself have seen them in action and they don't make any mistakes on the ball field. Oh, they'll be plenty tough Saturday.

"But we'll be tough, too."

He was reminded that Saverine would not, in all probability, be able to play, and that Vacarro's chances of getting into the game were slim.

"Poppycock!" he snapped. "I'll lay 1,000 to 1 they're both in there. Certainly they're out now, but Hagerty's only resting them. Tomorrow he'll have them working out, another workout Friday, and Saturday we get them. And I'd just as soon see Saverine on the bench—that lad can carry the mail.

"On second thought," he continued, "I hope he plays. I don't want Georgetown to have any excuses."

"Oh, so you're confident that Maryland will win?" we asked.

"Well, I don't say we're going to win, but I know the boys feel that it's going to be a tough afternoon for Georgetown—puhlenty tough."

Somewhat alarmed at the exuberance of Faber, Roy Mackert, his first lieutenant, diverted the conversation to the Pitt-Navy game. He diagrammed Pitt's plays on the blackboard.

"Beautiful blocking," he commented, describing Pitt's first touchdown play.

Some Real Blocking.

Mackert overlooked the interruption and continued with:

"Their passing wasn't as good as I expected, but——"

"Speaking of passing," Faber broke in, "Georgetown had better keep an eye on Willis. I'm going to turn him loose this game."

"Their tackling," continued Mackert, glaring belligerently at Faber, "was terrific, and——"

"Speaking of tackling," interjected Faber, "you'll see some real tackling this week."

Mackert gave up.

"He must be thinking we're Minnesota, or somebody," he said.

Gobblers Point For Gridders Of V. M. I.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Virginia Tech's squad started on a high speed training march toward the goal of the V. M. I. Cadets. The Gobblers did not put a foot on the practice field Monday or Tuesday, but from midweek until Thanksgiving the pace will be fast and furious.

The running attack will be the big item in the training program. It has been Tech's sharpest weapon all year and will again be the main forte of the Gobblers at Roanoke on Thanksgiving Day.

The coaches and players are bent upon putting even more zip into their charge than they did against Florida, Maryland, Carolina State and Virginia. Though the Techmen were a trifle slow now and then in the warm weather against Virginia, they showed lots of drive and clever execution of plays most of the game.

The Tech boys punted only three times during the game—which is tribute enough to the way they were driving, fighting for yardage. Against a scrappy, inspired Virginia defense the Techs rolled up impressive yardage totals and played bang-up football the second half.

Dempsey Named Fight Promoter

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 21 (AP).—Jack Dempsey will promote Max Baer's fight next June to defend his heavyweight title, Ancil Hoffman, Baer's manager, said here today.

The announcement of a place for the fight is waiting selection of a challenger, Hoffman said.

"I prefer a match with Jack Petersen, British champion," he said. "An international fight is a better drawing card."

Baer, suffering from an infected arm, was ordered to bed today shortly after he and Hoffman arrived from Chihuahua City, Mexico.

The infection will heal within two or three days, said Dr. W. R. Curtis.

Drinmore Lad Wins Hunt Club Race

Mellon Horse Is First in 3½ Hile Over Timber at Middleburg.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Drinmore Lad, the accomplished steeplechaser owned by Paul Mellon, today emerged as the outstanding entry in the annual Middleburg Hunt Club race meet when he won the R. Penn Smith, jr., Challenge Plate race, 3½ miles over timber.

Drinmore Lad's triumph today followed his victory of last Saturday in the opening day of the meet, when he won the featured Dinwiddie event over the Glenwood course of D. C. Sands.

2,000 in Attendance.

Approximately 2,000 turf folk representing high society of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Virginia saw Jim Ryan, Mr. Mellon's trainer, ride Drinmore Lad to victory over William Ewing's Kilmalogue by 20 lengths. The only other starter, John S. Ames' Grown Up, was 50 lengths behind the winner.

The hard and bumpy condition of the course caused the scratching of 10 entries, including Mrs. Zadin Mackaross' Gigolo, which had been rated as the chief contender of Drinmore Lad, which was held a 1-to-2 favorite.

Noah Lang broke Kilmalogue on top and the Ewing steeplechaser held the lead until the three-horse field passed the stands for the second time, when Ryan sent Drinmore Lad to the front. The winner was increasing his lead at every stride as the finish neared.

The time for the race, which saw all entries carry 165 pounds, was 6:57 4-5, considered good. The scratches were Danrock, Little Dan, Laguna Seca, Vallirue, Engineer II, Silber Pay, Gigolo, Harkins, Independence Boy and Dan McGee.

Well Played Is Winner.

The Wolver Hill, 2 miles over brush, saw the most sensational of the day's finishes with R. Z. N. Gambrill's Well Played, ridden by Laing, scoring by a half-length over Mrs. C. W. Durante's Patrick Day II. The latter was only a half-length in front of S. A. W. Baltazzi's White Lightning.

The field in the Wolver Hill was bunched throughout, with White Lightning the first to show in front. The leaders were changing positions at many stages of the race, but Laing sent Well Played into the lead with a well-timed rush as the finish line neared. Charley White rode Patrick Day II, with Sid Hirst astride White Lightning.

The race saw three scratches—Cottage Minstrel, Mirton and Aughrin Boy.

The Dresden, which saw Bill Street score by three lengths on Mr. Gould's What Have You, was run in the fastest time ever recorded by the Middleburg meet for a 2½-mile race over the brush. Andy Fowler's Peacock stayed on top for the first four fences, when What Have You took the lead. The winner beat off determined challenges by Drapeau, Cold Punch and Peacock.

Results of other races:

The Oakham, 1 mile over turf on the flat—Won by Mrs. Lewis Park's Thomas, ridden by Jim Ryan; second, Mrs. T. W. Durante's Little Woman, ridden by Louie Stoddard; third, Mrs. J. H. Whitney's Fighting Cock. Time, 1:43 3-5. Melburne Jake, Martinious also ran.

The Dresden, 2½ miles over brush—Won by Mrs. Frank M. Gould's What Have You, ridden by Bill Street; second, Mr. Alvin Untermyer's Drapeau, ridden by Randy Duffy; third, Mrs. J. H. Whitney's Cold Punch. Time, 4:30 4-5. Fairy Lure, Peacock, Hamptonian, Royal Riot also ran.

The Chilton, 3 miles over timber (two starters)—Won by Northwestern Stable's Indigo, ridden by Burly Cocks; second, Mrs. Zadin Mackaross' Diana, ridden by Sidney Hurst. Time, 6:51.

G. W. U. to Play Alabama in 1935

Pixlee Seeks Games With Other Southern Teams for Next Year.

ALTHOUGH Jim Pixlee, director of athletics at George Washington U., denied that contracts actually had been signed, it was revealed in Birmingham, Ala., yesterday, that the Colonials and Alabama will meet on the gridiron next October 5, at Griffith Stadium.

"Negotiations have been carried on for two months," Pixlee said yesterday, "but no contracts have been signed. However, if Alabama has announced the game it must be so. Several minor items must be settled before a definite agreement is reached, but I am sure we will experience no difficulty."

Would Fill Stadium.

Such a game would fill Griffith Stadium to capacity, establishing a new all-time attendance record for football in the District. G. W., with Tuffy Leemans, and Alabama, with its host of outstanding gridmen, would be a certain sell-out.

At the same time it was learned that Pixlee is dickering with more Southeastern Conference teams for places on his 1935 schedule, with a view of arranging the most difficult program ever booked for a District school. Pixlee feels that the 1935 G. W. eleven will be one of his best, capable of playing with and winning from top-notch opponents.

Non-Political Czar Advocated To Control New York Boxing

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Boxing in our town, already picking at the coverlets as it were, anemic from the depression, fever ridden from commission edicts, laws and rulings, was brought a step closer to rigor mortis recently by the arithmetic of Gen. Phelan, chairman of the local political athletic board.

The general in private life is a merchant and is a firm believer in the ledger system. To the perplexing problem of how to decide at the end of 10 or 15 rounds who had won and who had lost a simple bout of fisticuffs, and one that has been a bone of contention ever since two men first put up their dukes to one another, the good general brought straight from his counting house the elementary system of debits and credits.

It has worked, the general must have reasoned, in determining the number of brassieres, singlets, camisoles, vests, girdles, teddies and corselets, bought and sold in one year and the profit or loss derived therefrom: Why then would it not likewise work in determining profit and loss in a prize fight?

System Is Launched.

This system was launched in Madison Square Garden last Friday night and the result was confusion, semiriot, injustice, hysteria on the part of the beloved commission, and the taking up once more by Commissioner Bill Brown, of his favorite spot, way out on the end of the limb. The cause celebre was the 10-round preliminary fight between a rather stage-frightened and inept Senegambian from the Coast named Young Peter Jackson, who having failed signally in his first attempt in New York, was being given a second chance against a pugnacious, stumpy-armed middle lightweight from Boston named Sammy Fuller. So certain were the gamblers and odds-layers that this time Jackson would triumph that they offered $3 to $1, taking Jackson. In the first round, the small Mr. Fuller put Jackson on the seat of his pants for a count of 2 with an accurately placed left hook. In the second round he repeated the dose for a count of 3, and in the ninth round, he hit Jackson a right-hand smash to the mouth and floored him for a count of nine, and very nearly knocked him out. Jackson did manage to win some of the intermediary rounds, but at the finish of the contest he was a well-whipped African.

When the fight was ended, the three officials, Harold Barnes, Abe Goldberg, judges, and Danny Ridge, referee, totaled up their columns of red and black ink and arrived at the somewhat startling conclusion that Jackson had been outboxed, outhit, floored, humiliated and very nearly knocked out, but that he had won the contest because figures do not lie. The members of the audience let out a concerted yell at this swindle, and there was quite a to-do until well into the next fight. Had this been a main event, you may be sure that missiles would have come sailing through the air.

Audit of Ledger.

With trembling hands, the General began an immediate audit of the ledgers of the officials, while Commissioner Brown, who sat next to him, merely shook his head from side to side in amazement. Judge Barnes gave his vote to Jackson, Judge Goldberg to Fuller, and Referee Ridge then cast the deciding ballot in favor of the colored man. At a late hour, long after spectators, the victors and the vanquished had quitted the Garden for their beds, the general was still auditing. But on Tuesday last Commissioner Bill Brown reassumed his favorite berth out on the end of the bough when he very neatly tarred Judge Barnes and Referee Ridge with the black goo of suspicion in the following quotation made in open meeting: "General, has it ever occurred to you that some of our judges and referees are doing business with the gamblers? . . . Well, it is so. And I thought they were doing business on that young Peter Jackson-Sammy Fuller fight at the Garden last Friday night." The inference seems to me to be reasonably clear.

The general then avowed unswerving belief in the honesty of the officials, and the officials involved in the weird decision said that the ledger system so confused them that when they came to figure up the score they didn't really know who had won. Mr. Brown thereupon came out for the abolition of the judges and the return to the system of having one man, the referee render the decision, and while the politically appointed commissioners argue, squabble, accuse and experiment, boxing per se is just about ready for extreme unction.

Nonpolitical Czar Wanted.

I still feel that a prettier solution would be to abolish the commission and name one competent, honest, nonpolitical czar to control the sport. Bill Brown might be a good man for the post if he had more of a sense of humor, and could get over his penchant for roosting out on the end of that branch. And I have yet to hear the suggestion that in the place of debts and credits, integral calculus and square root, the judges apply simply common sense to the judging of a bout. If you will look at a fight with a clear head, no worries and no prejudices you can, tell nine times out of ten, who won and who lost. And the tenth time there is no harm in calling it a draw.

Charity Grid Game Here Rejected

Inter-High Officials Vote Against Schools to Compete.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE noble but nebulous suggestion for holding a charity football game between an all-prep school team and an all-high school team was packed away permanently in the mothballs yesterday.

The nobility of the suggestion was duly recognized by the inter-high Board of Faculty Advisors, but so was its impracticality, or such as it was termed. Consequently, at the recommendation of the advisors, the Board of Principals voted not to allow the high schools to participate in such a game this year.

Report Made Public.

A carefully prepared report on the question given out Principal Allan Davis, of Roosevelt, chairman of the Board of Principals, explains why the project was doomed. The report explains the action taken by the advisors.

It reads:

"After a discussion of all phases of the suggested charity football game by all the high school advisors, the board recommends that the Washington high schools not take part in such a game this year for the following reasons:

1. Lack of a suitable date.
2. Lack of a centrally located stadium suitable for handling the crowd.
3. Three of the schools have finished their schedules and stored their equipment.
4. The game conceivably might not prove a financial success if played under the above conditions.

Up to Advisers.

Principal Davis polled the school principals, who voted unanimously not to allow the game to be played. At a special meeting of the principals Tuesday they expressed favor toward the game "as a general proposition," but left the details to be worked out by the advisers.

The most logical dates for the game were thought to be either Thanksgiving Day or December 1. The George Washington-Oklahoma game of the former and an out-of-town trip by Central High on the latter prevented either date from being utilized.

Thought disappointed, prep school officials, notified of the action taken, expressed pleasure that the high school heads had gone as far with the question as they had. They declared their belief that another year could conceivably see a charity game of this nature an actuality.

Coast to Pick Rose Bowl Team

Squad, Probably Stanford, Will Be Selected on Monday.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 21 (AP).—The West's representative for the Rose tournament football game at Pasadena, January 1, 1935, probably Stanford, will be named by the Pacific Coast conference here Monday.

This announcement was made today by Prof. Hugh C. Willett, of the University of Southern California, who is President of the faculty representatives of the group. The ten members of the conference are casting secret ballots now.

Power to select the Western team was put in the hands of the conference last year by the Tournament of Roses committee, of Pasadena, as a direct result of adverse criticism from several sources over selections made in the past.

As in other years, however, the invited team from the East, South or Middlewest, will get its bid from the institution selected, independent of the coast conference.

How Team Is Selected.

Since the group does not recognize an official grid champion, a system for selecton of the western team has been worked out whereby the team given the highest rating after the votes are counted, is chosen.

"Each school will send in code its rating of all ten teams of the conference," said Prof. Willett. "How the institutions arrived at their choice depends entirely on their own individual methods. In the case of Southern California, the faculty representative meets with the coach of the team, the captain and the athletic director. Together they work out a conference rating. I think most of the schools follow the same plan.

"The numbers corresponding to the positions in the standings each school gets are totaled and the one with the lowest total will be selected. In the case of a tie for first place, the lowest totals, which necessarily would include three or more teams will be taken and those three or more will be voted on again, excluding all the others."

Babe Didrikson Wins Golf Round

Fort Worth, Tex., Nov. 21 (AP).—Mildred "Babe" Didrikson, Texas' feminine Olympic athlete, defeated Miss Nell Moody, of Sherman, 4 and 3, today in the first round of match play in the annual Fort Worth Women's Golf Association tournament.

The decisive victory over her steady-shooting opponent added luster to Miss Didrikson's accomplishment of winning the medal honors yesterday with a 77, five strokes better than any of the many seasoned golfing stars who qualified.

Mrs. D. Van Landingham, of Charlotte, N. C., defeated Mrs. E. R. Hury, of San Antonio, 1 up, in 19 holes.

Americans Win Matches in Australia

7 Out of 8 Pro Entrants Come Through in Opening Round.

MELBOURNE, Nov. 21 (AP).—Seven of eight American entrants won their opening matches today in the centenary professional golf tournament and gained the quarterfinals tomorrow.

Ky Laffoon, of Denver, prevented the meet from quickly developing into an all-American event when he missed a 3-foot putt on the thirty-seventh hole and lost to Martin Smith, Victoria professional.

Jimmy Thompson, of Los Angeles, winner of last week's $5,000 centenary open, barely scraped through with a spectacular 1-up victory over Rufus Stewart, portly South Australian. Three down on the eighteenth, Thompson squared the match on the twenty-third but was again 2 down on the thirty-third. He finally drew even on the thirty-fifth and captured the thirty-sixth when Stewart missed a 3-footer.

The other Americans won almost as they pleased, Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., piling up the day's biggest margin with an 11-to-9 victory over Sam Richardson, of New South Wales.

Harry Cooper, of Chicago, beat Teddy Naismith, of Victoria, 10 and 9; Leo Diegel downed Charlie Gray, of New South Wales, 9 and 7; Densmore Shute, of Philadelphia, beat Harry Boorer, of Victoria, 4 and 3; Craig Wood, of Deal, N. J., trimmed Fergus McMahon, of South Australia, 3 and 1, while Joe Ezar, of Waco, Tex., defeated Lou Kelly, of New South Wales, 2 and 1.

First prize in the match play is £500 (about $2,500).

Scotland Defeats Wales.

Tribe Obtains Outfielder In Deal

$10,000 Cash Also Paid Browns; Critics See Hornsby as Winner.

Yanks Send 5 Players to Frisco in Deal for Dimaggio.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 21 (AP).—Baseball's player mart, where the keenest traders of the game try to outslick each other, hummed with conversation and bids today, but the only outstanding deal was checked in by the St. Louis Browns and the Cleveland Indians.

While most of the major and minor league traders broke up long conferences by charging each other with attempted larceny, the Indians announced they had sent Pitcher Bob Weiland, Infielder Johnny Burnett and $10,000 cash to the Browns in return for Outfielder Bruce Campbell.

None of the involved players was rated as a star of the first dimension, but both Manager Rogers Hornsby, of the Browns, rated as one of the shrewdest traders, and General Manager Billy Evans, of the Indians, figured they had bargains.

Yankees Buy Costly Rookie.

The New York Yankees, hot on the trail of an outfielder to replace Babe Ruth, also made a deal with San Francisco whereby the Yankees obtain the sensational Joe Dimaggio, who established a Pacific Coast League record in 1933 by hitting safely in 61 consecutive games.

There was a catch in that transaction, however, as the Yanks wanted to be sure that Joe was not permanently slowed up by a knee injury last season. Under the terms, which would give the Yanks a chance to crawl out, they will send five players, three outright and two on option, to San Francisco next fall for the Coast League star.

However, they were advised that Dimaggio not only was physically fit, but that he was even a better prospect than Paul Waner was when he first came up. Two of the players who will be sent to San Francisco were unofficially reported to be Pitcher Floyd Newkirk and Pitcher Nosbert.

Hornsby Seen Winner.

It was the overwhelming concensus of the experts and David Harums that Hornsby had driven home another one of his clever deals to get Weiland, Burnett and cash for Campbell.

Although Weiland, a southpaw,

Point-a-Minute Grid Team Seeking Tough Opponents

MONMOUTH, Ore., Nov. 21 (AP).—All the tough games possible are wanted next season by the Oregon Normal School football team which climaxed its third victory in eight days by trouncing St. Martin's College, 101 to 0, last Saturday.

Larry Wolfe, coach of Oregon Normal was told by officials of the game and others that the score might have been double what it was had the first team played throughout.

In the first eight minutes of play four touchdowns were scored with the regulars—a pace that would bring around 200 points in 60 minutes of play.

Coach Wolfe, who teaches trick plays to keep his men in better spirits, said his squad, the day of the St. Martin's game, was "the best small-college team I have ever seen."

He would not venture how his team would look winding up its season against College of Idaho, at Caldwell, Thanksgiving Day.

A diversified and deceptive offense makes the power attack more effective in the football system used by Wolfe, a graduate of Colorado College.

Tihila, Normal's 195-pound full back, lunged through an opening in the line and went 40 yards through tacklers for the first touchdown. This detonated the power parade which featured long gains interspersed with spectacular and risky trick plays which proved successful.

A forward pass off a double lateral was completed. Reverses and "weak side" plays kept the defense from bunching to stop the power attack. Makela shot occasional long or short passes which made gains and spread the defense.

Coach Wolfe has 10 capable ball carrier who alternate in the back field. Against St. Martin's they and the entire squad of 41 were used.

In nine games this season the Wolves have scored 320 points, against 40 for opponents. At the start of the season Normal lost to Willamette University, 14 to 12, and then played a scoreless tie with Pacific University.

Normal won its last seven games, three of which were played in eight days. On a Friday the Teachers defeated Albany College, 13 to 0, and then on Monday, in an Armistice holiday game, defeated Eastern Oregon Normal at La Grande, 46 to 13. Saturday of that week came the 101-to-0 defeat of St. Martin's hopes.

When asked what sort of a schedule he wanted next year, Coach Wolfe replied instantly:

"All the tough games I can get."

Left-Handed Golfers Will Stage Annual Championship at Indian Spring Sunday

Curtis-Rice Favorites To Win

Bones Also to Compete; Marks Beats Charles at Rock Creek.

LEFT-HANDED golfers who are members of private clubs will come into their own Sunday with the playing of the Namandji Nindj championship at Indian Spring Country Club. When the tournament was inaugurated four years ago, the then golf chairman, Homer S. Pope, after much research, discovered that Namandji Nindj meant left-handed in some obsolete Cherokee Indian language. Hence the odd name.

Thirty-six holes will be the order. Byrne Curtis, of Beaver Dam, is the defending champion, having won it for the past two years.

Sam Rice, Cleveland baseball player; Tommy Bones, Manor Club star; Earl McAleer and Ottway A. Pratt, both of Indian Spring, will be among the favorites. Rice won the championship in 1930 and '31. Dr. Lester A. Reeves, of Congressional, donor of the trophy, also will enter. Entries are being received by George Diffenbaugh at Indian Spring.

Bob Marks won second flight honors in the Rock Creek turkey tournament yesterday by defeating John (Squirrell) Charles, 2 up in a ding-dong match. Both were out in 38, and even at the turn, but Marks made a spirited finish after grabbing the lead on the tenth and eleventh. Each scored 76s.

A putting green is being built near the first tee at Woodmont Country Club, and will be completed by next spring, Bill Illch, golf chairman, announced yesterday. It will be 18 holes, and is expected to relieve the Saturday and Sunday congestion at the starting tee.

Tommy Armour, former American, British and Canadian open champion, is expected in town today to join his brother, Sandy. The Black Scot may spend a few days here, playing Congressional and other local courses.

Previously scheduled for one day, the turkey golf tournament at Beaver Dam Country Club will be held on Saturday and Sunday of this week. It will be 18 holes medal play handicap.

J. F. Hooper lopped a few strokes off his handicap by scoring an 89 at Beaver Dam. This is the first time he has broken 90.

After being laid up for a few days with a cold, George Diffenbaugh, Indian Spring pro, returned to his duties at the golf shop yesterday.

Purse Offered For Nassau Open

Doherty Adds $5,000 to Winter Golf Gold Pot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 (AP).—The pot of gold at the end of the winter golf trail was $5,000 richer today as Col. Henry L. Doherty, president of the Florida year-'round clubs, announced a new tournament in Nassau, to be called the British Colonial Open.

The tourney, which will be played on the Bahamas Golf Club course December 18-20, will boost to $17,500 the total purse money to be offered by Col. Doherty for play during a two-week period next month.

The announcement follows final decision on the conditions for the fifth annual Miami-Biltmore open, the purse for which Col. Doherty has increased from $10,000 to $12,500. This event, the winter's richest golf tournament, will hold the boards at Coral Gables, Fla., December 8-14, with two divisions competing for an equal share of the prize money.

A feature of the new British Colonial open will be the amateur competition for the new governor of the Bahamas cup to be presented by the Hon. Bede Clifford for low amateur score. This will correspond to the Doherty trophy, the low award in the Miami-Biltmore event.

Dakotans Here For Tilt With Colonials

Visitors Looking Healthy for Grid Battle Tomorrow Night.

JIM PIXLEE'S only worry, other than straightening out the tangled details of next year's game with Alabama, seems to be impressing upon his squad the fact that North Dakota will offer more than passive resistence tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium.

George Washington walloped the Sioux last season, 27-6, the worst lacing Dakota ever took before a home crowd. But Pixlee does not regard the final count as the true margin of difference between the two. Superior physical condition on the part of the Colonials was the deciding factor. Injuries, too many of them, ruined Dakota's hopes.

West had them out at Griffith Stadium for a workout yesterday. The line is plenty big. It will scale close to 190 pounds, or just four pounds less than the Colonial wall averages. The backs should come in around 185, which is about six pounds more than G. W.'s ball-toters.

North Dakota makes no bones about its determination to stop Tuffy Leemans. Tuffy was the big thorn in their collective side last season, and they reason that by stopping him they'll not only be revenged but will have an even chance of winning.

Tough on Plebes.

George Washington waged war on the freshmen again yesterday, which was rather tough on the freshies, who did not fare so well. The team appears to be at the peak of its form and is determined to stop the Sioux by a score even larger than last year's count.

The game certainly will not lack color, what with G. W.'s scarlet uniforms matching the Kelly-green and pink of Dakota. West believes snappy, even loud uniforms help a team, and he practices what he preaches.

Large Crowd Expected For Indoor Horse Show

A large turnout is expected tomorrow night at the indoor horse show of the Riding and Hunt Club, with keen competition expected in eight classes.

Among the events scheduled are: Class 1, horses suitable to become hunters, to be shown in halter. Class 2, hunter; open to all; conformation, 25 per cent; performance, 75 per cent; 3-year-olds to jump 3½ feet; others 4 feet. Class 3, saddle class, open to all. Class 4, jumpers, open to all; judged under International Equestrians Federation rules. Class 5, Corinthian class, open to all; performance, 75 per cent; conformation, 15 per cent; appointment, 10 per cent. Class 6, hunter hacks, open to club members only; to jump four jumps 3½ feet; conformation, 15 per cent; jumping, 35 per cent; performance, 50 per cent. Class 7, scurry class; these jumps: No. 1, side of hall; No. 2, center; No. 3, west; take jumps as follows: No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 2, No. 1 and out; time to be added to faults in determining winner. Class 8, ladies' hunter; conformation, 25 per cent; performance, 75 per cent; jumps, 3½ feet.

Danville, Va., Nov. 21 (AP).—James English has acquired the Martinsville Baseball Club in the Bi-State League, taking it over from the Woodson interest which controlled it last season, it was learned here today. Terms of the sale were not made known.

Police Guard Army Squad At Drill

Soldiers Keep Strangers Off Field; Rain Hampers Irish.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 21 (AP).—Coach Gar Davidson called out the police today to make sure Army's football squad could practice in seclusion for the Notre Dame game.

The Plebes were using Michie Stadium for their game with Dean Academy, so Davidson took his squad back to the Plains and threw a cordon of military police around the practice field to keep uninvited guests on the move.

The green-clad Ramblers, impersonated by the scrubs, again furnished the opposition for the varsity. Work on the offensive was stressed as the timing was very poor yesterday.

"This will end our practice contact work for the year, I hope," Davidson said when the drill was over. "We plan to scrimmage next week for the Navy game, but will rest up after what I know will be a very hard game with Notre Dame."

The squad is in the best physical condition of the season, and it will need to be in view of the fact that the Cadets will be outweighed 10 pounds per man on Saturday.

The team leaves after tomorrow's practice for Briarcliff Lodge, where they will rest until game time. The Corps of Cadets will not go down to New York until Saturday morning and will enter the stadium at 12:45 p. m.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 21 (AP). Elmer Layden was in a mournful mood today as rain deprived Notre Dame's football warriors of their last chance to put in a full scrimmage against Army offensive formations.

The head man of the Irish took his squad indoors and did the best he could with a dummy scrimmage against the freshmen who used the Cadets' plays, but bemoaned the lack of a "live" workout.

Hoya-Terp Plebes To Battle on Grid

The Terp youngsters eked out a 7-to-6 win over V. M. I. '38 last week and also hold a 13-t-o6 decision over Virginia's Frosh. The only blemish on their record is a 12to-0 defeat by Catholic U.'s yearlings.

n-s2M -hC-U.irDKsbeen'Tech. c cm Georgetown nosed out Wyoming Seminary, 7 to 6, and won handily from Richmond's frosh, holding both teams to a total of four first downs. Coach Dick Danner's lads appear to have the edge on Al Heagey's crew and the Young Hoyas will enter the game decided favorits.

Gallaudet Ready For Shenandoah

If Gallaudet fails to stop Shenandoah College Saturday when the Blues celebrate home-coming day at Kendall Green, it will be no fault of Coach Teddy Hughes.

Driving his men through yesterday's drizzle until darkness enveloped the field, he indicated that no effort will be spared to have his men at the peak of their physical condition.

Gallaudet has yet to win a game this season, but it feels confident of taking the measure of Shenandoah, which it swamped, 80 to 0, in their last game several years ago.

Howard U. Adds Seats For Lincoln 'Classic'

The board of athletic control of Howard University has arranged to supplement the present seating capacity of the university stadium, now in excess of 8,000, by addition of 2,000 additional seats, for the Howard-Lincoln gridiron "classic," to be played at 1:30 o'clock Thanksgiving Day.

Dusek Is Given Verdict Over Christy

TWO-OUT-OF-THREE-FALL wrestling matches were inaugurated at the Auditorium luast night in a fearful feature between Rudy Dusek, the Omaha Ohmigawsh, and Vic Christy, the California Cutie.

Christy won the first fall, Dusek took the second, of course, and the third went to—surpise! surprise!—Dusek.

The exhibition was replete with the thrills and frills that have made modern-day hulk heaving a thing of wonder and a joy to behold. Things haven't been going so well in the wrestling racket here of late, and one can just imagine the moguls of maul calling the participants on the carpet prior to last night's bout for a pep talk.

"Looky here," probably said the head mogul in his best football coach manner. "Things ain't goin' so well in the business down in Washington, so I guess you boys better forget about union rules an' go to work in real earnest until we get the business goin' okay again. Now don't forget, give your all for dear old Wrestling."

Fans in Uproar.

The boys did. Almost before the opening twitter of the timekeeper's whistle had reached the farthermost rcesses of the gallery, Dusek put the 1,500 customers into an uproar by digging his knee gently but firmly, into Christy's midsection.

"A foul, a palpable foul!" shrieked the audience in unison.

Referee Benny Bortnick quickly aided the cause by halting the exhibition to wipe gobs and gobs of grease from Dusek's body.

Christy won the first fall in 21½ minutes with a series of elbow pops to the jaw and a body slam.

Both members of the circuit must have been tired answering the whistle for the second fall, because Rudy quickly inserted himself into a scissors hold which was held for several minutes until he finally wiggled through the ropes. Coming out of it, he commenced to belabor Valiant Vic unmercifully, until the angular Californian's temper finally snapped and he squashed him with a squash hold. Time of second fall, 13 minutes.

The third fall was most exciting. Dusek pummelled Christy with a series of perfectly permissible elbow wallops to the head and body for some time. Suddenly, the ultimate loser launched a series of flying scissors. He missed the first, landing soundly on his head. He missed the second and crack went his head again. After about the fourth or fifth three-point landing made on his cranium, he was too weak to resist Rudy when he applied a squash hold. Time of the deciding fall, 14 minutes.

'Curly' Byrd to Speak At Eastern High Fete

H. C. (Curly) Byrd, vice president of Maryland University, and Paul Magoffin, nationally known football referee, will be the guests of honor at the annual interhigh school football banquet at Eastern High School this evening at 6 o'clock. He will address the gathering.

Approximately 150 persons, including the high school coaches, captains, and faculty members, are expected to attend. Following the supper, a pageant will be staged with the Chicago World's Fair as the background. The play is called "The Eastern Parade."

Navy Gridders Start Grind For Army

Cadet Plays Are Tested in Long Scrimmage Session.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.). Navy gridders, now in the midst of the final round-up for the Army game in Philadelphia December 1, put in a busy afternoon today on a mist-enshrouded field.

Head Coach Tom Hamilton and his assistants devoted the major portion of time to a defensive drill against the passing game as exploited by the West Point Cadets, fashioned by scouts after plenty of observation. This was for the benefit of the regular backs and their understudies who are likely to get action in the service tilt.

Dressed in Army Suits.

The plays were reeled off by Navy's "Army" team, composed of varsity reserves attired in togs identical with those worn by the Cadets, and with names of the leading Army players across their breasts. Buzz Borries, Bill Clark and other regulars generally broke them up.

Hamilton personally directed this phase of the practice with the able assistance of Johnny Wilson, former St. John's star, whose help he has had throughout the season. Wilson has been a big cog in Navy athletics for 15 years.

While the backs were going through these paces, at another part of the field Rip Miller, chief line coach, and his group of Navy assistants gave the forward line pointers on how best to meet the charges of Army's first line defense.

The day's program was topped off by a skeleton scrimmage session, and heavier work of this order is on the card for tomorrow. The regulars will carry on against three opposing forces, the varsity reserves, shock troops of Squad B and the plebes, the latter having finished their regular season, but remain in training for the special purpose of prepping the big team for the impending struggle.

W. & M. Fears Spiders; Squad in Long Practice

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 21 (AP).—Varsity and freshmen elevens held a stiff scrimmage this afternoon as William and Mary pushed preparations for the Thanksgiving Day game with Richmond.

Charlie Shade's position at quarter back was occupied alternately by Hutzy Blaker and Johnny Trueheart. New plays are being developed for use against the Spiders.

With the Hunters . . .

By M. W. Meier.

YESTERDAY'S mist and rain was a boon to the hunters. Bird dogs now stand a chance to do their "stuff" on upland game.

Among the many professional men who have been shooting the past few days, Dr. G. B. Gill and his guests, Peter Nyce, the attorney, and B. B. Sandidge, seem to have had the best luck. Perhaps it was due to their good dogs. At any rate, the sportsmen reported a bag of 86 quail over the three days they were out. In addition they brought in 16 rabbits and a pair of squirrels.

Dr. Gill's farm, in the Northern Neck of Virginia, was the scene of their hunting trip.

Turkey Hunters Chagrined.

No one in the District has so far reported bagging a wild turkey, although numerous quail hunters have mentioned sighting them from a distance.

Because of the dry season, wild turkeys have been hard to find. They are farther "back" and better hidden than ordinarily. Not in years has a better hatch been reported than the past season. The drought was a blessing to the gobblers. The hens were able to rear their hatches without regard for the weather.

Federal License Unnecessary.

Although woodcock and dove are classified by Uncle Sam as migratory birds, no special Federal license is required to hunt them.

The Federal hunting license, which costs $1, pertains solely to wild fowl, or duck, and your State license covers your right to shoot dove, snipe, rail, woodcock and other similar birds.

Incidentally, something like $800,000 has already been collected of the anticipated million dollars the Biological Survey hoped to raise from the sale of Federal wild-fowl hunting licenses.

This money is to be used for the acquisition of Federal shooting and breeding grounds and no sportsman should object to the Biological Survery's efforts in his behalf. Some 12 projects are now under way and, plus the special money set aside for submarginal land, the department has about $8,000,000 which is to be spent for the benefit of future hunters.

Cold Weather Suggestion.

Seth Gordon, president of the American Game Protective Association, makes the suggestion that sportsmen who enjoy shooting quail over certain farms, arrange with the owners to leave a few shocks of corn available for birds to feed on during the winter months.

The value of a shock is very little, yet to hungry birds it can mean a great deal. It means refuge and food during days when snow spells starvation as far as natural sustenance is concerned.

Because of the drought, Uncle Sam is already arranging to distribute thousands of bushels of grain to upland birds, but the real issue will still lay with the sportsmen who are right on the grounds.

80 Quail Bagged.

Ford Young, Frank Burroughs, John Ray and Howard Leapley, all members of the National Capitol Field Trial Club, were contented guests of Jack McCarthy, at his farm near Delaplain, Va., the past few days.

Using four bird dogs, the men reported a bag of 80 quail over a two-day shoot. Birds were plentiful but the country was hilly and dry and hard to work.

As a side diversion, Howard Leapley ran his prize pack of four beagle hounds and the shooters accounted for no less than 55 rabbits.

Golf Waggles Aid Player Limber Up for Shot

By Dave Herman.

IN golf, more so than in any other sport, it is necessary for the player to keep himself limbered up every time he prepares to make a shot.

A ball player keeps his bat moving back and forth as he stands up to the plate; a track star, waiting for the signal "on your mark, get set, go," keeps up a rhythmic, springy-like movement with his hands and feet, and a boxer usually keeps both hands going while looking for an opening.

In golf this limbering-up or preliminary procedure is known as waggling or the waggles.

Most of the big shots of the game while addressing the ball shake their hips like hulu-hula dancers, and shift their clubs from the front to the back of the innocent golf ball in pendulum fashion.

Take it from Roland Mackenzie, Congressional pro, "waggles in golf are quite important."

"They help to break the tension," Mackenzie says, "but there are certain things one must guard against in waggling.

"If you're going to waggle, keep it up. Don't stop and start over again. If you do stop nine times out of ten you'll mess up your shot. There should be a certain rhythm in your waggling, and don't waggle too many times."

One of the oddest waggling cases on record is that of Dr. Larry Otell, of Indian Spring, who lost his quarter-finals match with Dick Walsh, eventual champion, in the 1922 National public links tournament at East Potomac. Otell was playing his approach to the green on an important hole. Across the river the Army War College Band was playing a martial air. Otell waggled back and forth in tune. Suddenly the band changed its tune, Otell completely missed his shot, and thus broke himself of too much waggling.

What goes on in a golfer's mind as he waggles is hard to tell. A thousand things, you might say. Professionals claim they (pros) concentrate only on hitting the ball, as they waggle. Their swing is mechanical, and they're not concerned with their grips, hip action, etc.

But the pros have a good idea what the average divot diggers are thinking about as they waggle. One duffer is concerned with remembering to keep a straight left arm, to pivot properly, and keep his eye on the ball. Another is thinking about playing enough hook to keep from going out of bounds, and still another is thinking about that trap that lies just 200 yards ahead.

Invariably, say the pros, that mental pattern of the trap, the hook, the slice, the out-of-bounds will cause him to do just those things and go just those places.

Professional George Diffenbaugh, an expert waggler, says that he visualizes his shot going either down the fairway or on the green. Which is an optimistic way of looking at it.

Commonwealth Goes From Last to First in Brief Burst of Speed to Win at Bowie

Race Fastest Of Meeting At Track

Burch-Trained Horse Gallops to Wire 10 Lengths in Front.

By Walter Haight.

MRS. W. M. JEFFORD'S Commonwealth, a gelded son of Bostonian, the winner of a Preakness, stole the turf show at near-by Bowie yesterday in the Horatio Sharpe. With one burst of speed on the swing for the stretch, Commonwealth went from last to first in a field of five and then drew out to win as Jockey Rosengarten pleased. For official purposes Commonwealth's margin at the finish was ten lengths, but he could have made the advantage a city block had Rosengarten so desired.

Trained by Preston Burch, of Washington, Commonwealth ran the fastest mile and 70 yards of the meeting and stamped himself as of stake caliber for next year. In a previous race, Commonwealth had defeated old horses at Pimlico under lightweight. The fact that this juvenile picked up weight yesterday accounts for his good mutuel of $6.50.

Rough Diamond Is Second.

Rough Diamond, representing C. V. Whitney, was trying to make it four in a row and finished second a length in front of Our Reigh. The last named was the favorite with much of his support due to the appearance of Don Meade in the saddle.

Commonwealth's performance caused much arching of eyebrows by the experts. They conceded the Burch-trained 2-year-old a good chance of winning, but none predicted the smashing race.

Rosengarten held Commonwealth under strong restraint and the juvenile trailed the field along the back stretch as first Sylvan Song and then Legume set the pace. On the far turn Commonwealth was still last. And then through the fog shot the youngster. Rosengarten had given him running orders, and he responded. In not more than a half furlong Commonwealth bounded through the field to the front.

It was like passing a car on the road for the horse. Once in front, Rosengarten drew in several notches and coasted to the line.

Watch Him a Victor.

The Leonard Calvert Handicap, a mile and a sixteenth test, occupied the feature spot on the program and resulted in an easy victory for Watch Him, Mrs. J. D. Hertz's color bearer. Ridden by Don Meade, Watch Him was held off the pace until reaching the stretch, where he moved up with a rush, took the lead and scampered to the wire. Soon Over was second and Bubblesome, the early pace-setter, staggered into the third money. Watch Him was the favorite at $4.40.

Trainer Selby Burch, of Washington, sent a fit entry to the post in the day's opener, and Bubbling Spring ran first with Spixi third in the field of 12. M. J. Brennan, the favorite with Meade in the saddle, split the entry, which paid an $8.70 mutuel. The main money was between the first two to finish from the start of the sprint.

Acautaw Wins Second.

Acautaw, a bad-legged horse which has to be remodeled between races, scored a driving victory in the second race, another sprint affair. By a scant head, and wearing the colors of Mrs. A. P. Doyle, Acautaw, which won the first race of his career at Bowie, defeated a fast-closing Law Suit. Toytime was third as eight competed. Acautaw took the lead on the trip down the backstretch, but had to be ridden out by Meade to gain the decision. The winner was the first odds-on favorite to score at the meeting and paid $3.60.

Sun Way, graduated from the maiden ranks in the fourth race, coming with a rush in the stretch to pay a $14.20 mutuel. Advocate Junior and Bay Sister followed the son of Sun God II across the finish line after the mile and 70 yards trip.

Easy Sailing, with Coucci up, won from Repeal and Retribution in the final.

BUBBLING SPRING, caught in a tangle directly after the start, recovered quickly to reach contention before leaving the back stretch, swung to the outside of the leaders at the stretch turn, took command with a rush when straightened into the home stretch, then finished with speed in reserve. M. J. BRENNAN went into an easy lead, shook off ROMOLA, but could not stay with the winner when challenged. SPIXI, badly crowded and knocked off stride midway of the back stretch, secured racing room on the outside thereafter and finished stoutly. ROMOLA went forwardly placed and raced well. LADY MARLBORO finished willingly. ABERCROMBIE had a rough trip. CHORTLE was outrun. POLYTUDE was unable to menace the leaders. NIGHT FLOWER stopped.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ACAUTAW, $3.80, $2.70, $2.50; LAW SUIT, $3.60, $3.10; TOYTIME, $3.90.

ACAUTAW, taken under steadying restraint while in close pursuit of BALLY BAY, gained command when leaving the back stretch, saved much ground to move clear at the stretch turn, but had to be hard ridden thereafter to withstand LAW SUIT. Latter responded stoutly when put to a drive, lost ground entering the home stretch, but closed strongly when straightened out. TOYTIME, taken back midway of the back stretch, circled her field thereafter and closed fast. CANDESCENT raced strongly from the beginning and held on well. JESS was overmatched. CANTERSINE was outrun. FLOWER TIME was held safe. BALLY BAY stopped badly after going three furlongs.

THIRD RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Horatio Sharpe. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:12. Off at 2:15. Winner, Mrs. W. M. Two-dollar mutuels paid—COMMONWEALTH, $6.50, $3.40, $12.30; ROUGH DIAMOND, $4.00, $2.40; OUR REIGH, $2.30.

COMMONWEALTH ran third in the early stages while galloping strongly back of his field, moved up fast in the last half-mile while on the outside, then sprinted into a commanding lead to win as his rider pleased. ROUGH DIAMOND, rated close up from the beginning, outstayed OUR REIGH when put to a hard drive. OUR REIGH was placed to strong urging and punishment in the last five-sixteenths, but could not stay with the winner. LEGUME and SYLVAN SONG were used up while setting the pace.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For maidens, all ages. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:43. Off at 3:47. Winner, E. K. Bryson's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—EASY SAILING, $6.80, $3.60, $2.80; REPEAL, $4.30, $3.20; RETRIBUTION, $3.90.

EASY SAILING, hurried into a forward position and nicely handled while forcing the early pace, took command when leaving the back stretch and kept under pressure thereafter, had enough in reserve to withstand REPEAL. Latter, well placed in the early stages, came stoutly for the final drive. RETRIBUTION worked his way up on the outside and closed strong during the stretch drive. CALORIC showed a good effort. HERMIE ROY made up ground slowly. SOCIALITE weakened after racing forwardly. LAWLESS LADY was held safe. IMMUNE tired badly.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000. The Leonard Calvert Handicap. For all ages. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Winner, Mrs. J. D. Hertz's ch. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WATCH HIM, $4.40, $2.90, $2.50; SOON OVER, $3.90, $3.30; BUBBLESOME, $3.00.

WATCH HIM, strongly restrained back of the leaders for the first six furlongs, challenged strongly when reaching the final curve, assumed command without effort at the stretch turn and then drew out at will. SOON OVER went stoutly for the early six furlongs, then was held safe after disposing of BUBBLESOME. Latter set a good pace for six furlongs, then held on well to outstay MAD FRUMP. Latter was unable to better his position under strong pressure. DEDUCE and SILENT SHOT were never dangerous factors.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:46. Off at 3:48. Winner, H. Linglebach's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALIOS, $6.30, $3.20, $3.10; GARDEN MESSAGE, $3.80, $3.00; STEELHEAD, $3.70.

BALIOS, bumped at the break, but recovering quickly, took command going to the first turn and was rated until reaching the home stretch, came willingly under punishment after losing command momentarily midway of the home stretch and was up in the last strides. GARDEN MESSAGE, forced a steady pace during the running, but hung after gaining a slight lead in the closing furlong. STEELHEAD, rated off the pace, finished resolutely and finished much the strongest. UNENCUMBERED held to a forward position, but was unable to menace when placed to a drive. FLAGSTONE was never dangerous. KEEP OUT was always outrun.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—EASY SAILING, $5.20; REPEAL, $3.80; ADVOCATE JUNIOR, $4.10, $3.30; BAY SISTER, $7.80.

SUN WAY moved up steadily when kept on the outside on the back stretch. Came willingly for the final drive and wore ADVOCATE JUNIOR down inside the final furlong. ADVOCATE JUNIOR sprinted into a clear lead after going six furlongs, but weakened fast after entering the home stretch. BAY SISTER, slugging in the early stages, settled in her stride and gained steadily in the last half-mile. APPEAR closed gamely after being crowded back going to the first turn. DONEE made up ground gradually. FAN raced forwardly, but was not good enough. TELL IT weakened. MORWAY stopped.

Tropical Park Sale Denied by Official

Miami, Fla., Nov. 21 (U.P.).—The Tropical Park racing season, slated to open December 15 might be delayed, but meanwhile the track is not for sale, William Dwyer, managing director of the Gables Racing Association, said today. An offer for the purchase of the track has been made, but turned down.

Dwyer said the scheduled 28-day meeting will be delayed in its opening beyond December 15 if the Florida Racing Commission will meet Dwyer's request to change the date.

Levinsky Yields To Wife's Demands

Chicago, Nov. 21 (A.P.).—Kingfish Levinsky, world's champion "unkissed bridegroom," has agreed to give Roxanne Glickman, his bride, a divorce and will pay her a lump sum settlement.

This became known today when attorneys for the prize fighter and fan dancer appeared before Judge Philip J. Finnegan. They said that within ten days a settlement would be worked out and a stipulation permitting Roxanne to obtain a default divorce.

The Kingfish is Harry Krakow, although he doesn't use that name.

had a good season with the Boston Red Sox in '33, he was ineffective last season and was sent to Cleveland. He wound up with a record of two victories and 10 defeats. However, Hornsby, a keen judge of pitchers, figures Weiland will be a star under different surroundings.

Campbell, one of the prized rookies, batted .281 in 138 games last season, but his fielding didn't suit the Rajah. Burnett played in 71 games and batted .299.

Cubs Seek Lindstrom.

The Pittsburgh Pirates and Chicago Cubs were attempting to make a big deal whereby Outfielder Lindstrom and Pitcher Larry French would go to the Cubs for Pitchers Guy Bush and Outfielder-First Baseman Babe Herman. The reported hitches were that the Pirates wanted Shortstop English instead of Herman and that the Cubs wanted to land a good first baseman, possibly Jim Bottomley of the Cincy Reds, before letting even Herman go.

George Washington, Indianapolis outfielder, who missed the American Association batting championship by a point last season, was sold to the White Sox for $20,000 and Pitcher Phil Sullivan and Infielder Billy Sullivan. The Brooklyn Dodgers, Chicago White Sox and Phillies wanted him and Indianapolis was driving a hard bargin. Reports were that Washington would cross the Calumet River to the White Sox.

Indians Sign O'Neill.

Cleveland also signed up Steve O'Neill, one of its old world series heroes, as coach today, getting him from Toledo, of the American Association, for two players, Pitcher Forrest Twogood and another to be named later. O'Neill managed Toledo for the past two seasons.

Meanwhile, the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues opened its annual convention with an attendance of 900.

The International League waged its battle with the American Association over the play-off plans and little world series and refused to confer with the A. A. committee on plans for the series. So the A. A. chiefs started negotiations with the Pacific Coast League for a fall series between their respective champions.

Undefeated Gophers May Play Ohio State in Charity Game at Columbus Dec. 1

State Heads Join Hands On Plans

Game Would Be Played in Columbus' Horseshoe Stadium.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21 (AP).—The dream game of the Western Conference football season, a clash between Minnesota's mighty array and Ohio State's spectacular Buckeyes, is a possibility.

The game, if plans of Ohio enthusiasts, encouraged by Gov. George White, if successful, would be played for charity, probably in the huge horseshoe stadium at Columbus on December 1.

So eager is Ohio to match its Buckeyes against Minnesota, generally conceded to be the country's most powerful team, that Harry P. Wolfe, publisher of the Columbus Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal, has sought to enlist the aid of President Roosevelt in attempting to bring about a huge charity event.

Olson Is Sought.

George White has attempted to reach Gov. Floyd Olson of Minnesota, who is in Washington, to make an official proposal for the game. His efforts to reach the Minnesota Governor were unsuccessful last night, but he was expected to talk to him today.

A large obstacle in the way of such a clash is a Western Conference rule which limits its members to eight football games a season. This rule can be waived only by action of the conference faculty committee on athletics.

On only one occasion has the committee suspended the rule. In 1931, a series of charity games, involving all ten teams in the league, was arranged. At that time the Gophers played Ohio State and won. Sufficient incentive may be provided to suspend the regulation which has prevented Big Ten teams from thinking over Rose Bowl bids, by urging from high official sources.

A Good Record.

Ohio State is out of the Big Ten championship picture, unless Wisconsin should accomplish such a staggering upset as a victory over Minnesota Saturday at Madison, and Indiana should defeat Purdue at Lafayette. Nevertheless, since losing to Illinois, 14 to 13, early in the season, have worked up a record comparable with Minnesota's.

Each defeated Michigan, 34 to 0. Ohio State mauled Indiana, 33 to 0, while Minnesota's margin over the Hoosiers was 30 to 0. The Buckeyes whipped Chicago, 33 to 0, and last week Minnesota thumped the Maroons, 35 to 7. All games were played on the victor's home lots.

President Silent.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Dr. Lotus D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota, declined to say today what his attitude would be toward a post-season charity football game between Minnesota and Ohio State University.

Told that Gov. Olson of Minnesota had joined hands with Gov. White of Ohio in a move to arrange such a game, Dr. Coffman said Big Ten restrictions against post-season contests first would have to be removed.

He said that whether Minnesota would consent to meet the Buckeyes would depend "entirely upon a vote of the faculty" and refused to forecast the result of such a vote, if taken.

Cubs Get Carleton, Of Cards, in Trade

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs tonight sent Pitchers Tinning and Dick Ward and cash to the St. Louis Cardinals for Pitcher Tex Carleton.

Carleton won 16 games and lost 11 for the world champions during the past season. Tinning won 4 and lost 6 for the third-place Cubs.

Ward, with the Cubs for a while last season as a relief pitcher, was sent to Los Angeles, where he won 13 and lost 4.

Pep Rally Planned For Howard Game

An old-fashioned pep rally will be held at the Howard Theater next Wednesday at 7 p. m. for both the Howard and Lincoln football teams that meet in their annual gridiron skirmish Thanksgiving Day.

Songs and cheers will be conducted by the Howard cheer leaders and a unique bonfire will be lighted on the stage. Specially selected football short films will be displayed.

Shaffer to Coach Cumberland Team

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.). Dyke Shaffer, star guard of the one-time famous Keyser Collegians and recently cage mentor of Bruce High School at the Westvaco A. A., will coach the Keyser Golden Knights this season, according to announcement made last night by Seb Jacobs, manager of the team.

The Knights held their first practice session today at the K. of P. Armory in Keyser. Home games this season will be played on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

Pros to Foster Golf Among Youths

To Promote Boys' Matches to Aid Game; Jacobus Elected President.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21 (AP).—Golf professionals of the Nation launched a plan today to foster the game among the youth of the country.

Delegates attending the Professional Golfers Association convention here indorsed a move to promote boys' championships, to be worked out along the lines of the American Legion baseball tournament, with sectional, State and national competition.

The pros see no reason why colleges and high schools should not spend a portion of their athletic funds on golf. They feel that golf instruction in schools would benefit their own members and at the same time create a new field of players.

Jacobus Is Elected.

George Jacobus, of Ridgewood (N. J.) Country Club, was elected president of the organization for the third consecutive year. R. W. Tracy, of Milwaukee, was renamed secretary, and J. B. Mackie, treasurer.

The 1935 championship was awarded to the Twin Hills Country Club, of Oklahoma City, Okla., with the dates to be set later.

The proposal to broaden the rules of play in the championship matches to permit 64 players to qualify for the final match play instead of only 32 as at present was favorably regarded by the delegates. The proposal was referred to the executive committee to work out the necessary details to put the plan in operation for next year's tournament.

Exemption Rules.

The representatives also adopted a proposal to exempt eight players who reach the finals in match play the previous year from playing in the qualifying rounds in the current championship. Formerly only the eight members of the Ryder Cup Team were given the benefit of this exemption.

The report of the tournament bureau showed a total of $117,000 had been distributed among the pros as prize money this year, $71,000 for winter tournaments and $41,000 for the summer events.

More than $125,000 has been lined up for the 1935 season.

Riding Arena As Fight Site Assured

Hunt Club Official Says Action on Debt Will Not Affect Bouts.

A HIGH OFFICIAL of the Riding and Hunt Club last night flatly denied reports that the future of boxing at the Twenty-second street riding hall would be endangered by any action which might be taken by the organization in solving the problem offered by a large outstanding debt.

"Boxing will continue at the Riding and Hunt Club exactly as it has since the legalization of the sport here, no matter what action is taken by club members in settling their financial difficulties," John J. Sirica, attorney for Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, was told.

Other members of the club, commenting on published reports that the present site might be placed on the auction block to meet outstanding debts, explained to The Post that the financial situation was no different at this time than it had been for a number of years.

May Hold Parley Today.

They said the outstanding debt, estimated at about $75,000, had been on the books for some time and required special action of the club members each year. A special meeting to settle the problem this year will be called some time this week, probably today.

"There is a movement afoot among some members to move the club out in the country," one official admitted. "People do not want to ride over hard-surfaced roads such as are adjacent to the Twenty-second street location. That is one of the things that will be considered at the special meeting."

It generally was believed in most quarters that, even though the present site were to be sold, the one-year contract on the location for boxing, held by Ahearn, would remain in effect.

"I have been told not to worry, that the boxing will continue as long as my contract runs," Ahearn said last night.

Color of an opaque body is determined from the colors absorbed and reflected by that body. Seen in a white light an object that appears to be red appears so because the red of the white light is reflected while the yellow and blue are absorbed. Thus gold, generally observed as a bright yellow metal, is yellow only under certain conditions—that is when it is in a solid piece. Powdered forms of gold vary in color from black to dark red.

The giant fig tree of Parlier, Calif., accredited by the U. S. Forestry Service with being the largest in the world, has a trunk that is 10 feet around waist high.

The tree was planted by I. N. Parlier, founder of the town that bears his name, in 1881. It is probably a White Adriatic, although this is not definitely known.

Giant earthworms, some reaching 11 feet in length, grow in the Victoria district of southeastern Australia. Their average length of four to six feet is greatly exceeded by some individuals. They live in rich clay soil, remaining deep in their slimy burrows in summer. In the autumn they live close to the surface, and when disturbed they retract into their holes so violently that they can be heard some distance.

Best Runners Invited to Compete

Jap, Dane, Swede and Italian May Come to Indoor Meet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 (U.P.).—A squat Japanese, who can blaze through 60 meters like a whippet, and three of the world's greatest middle-distance runners—a durable Dane, a trim-lined Swede and a sturdy Italian—have been invited to compete in American meets during the approaching indoor track season.

Dan Ferris, secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, announced dispatch of the invitations today and said he expected all four to accept because of favorable preliminary negotiations. "If they do," he added, "it will assure the banner indoor season in A. A. U. history."

Olympic Sensation.

Ferris was particularly hopeful that Takanori Yoshioka would make the trip. This diminutive Japanese was one of the sensations of the last Olympic games. He surprised every one at Los Angeles by making the final of the 100 meters. Running the final, he was far ahead of Ralph Metcalfe and Eddie Tolan at the 50-meter mark, but he lacked the stamina to finish in the money. Ferris rates Yoshioka the fastest man in the world at 50 meters and possibly at 60.

Ferris hopes to pit Yoshioka against Metcalfe of Marquette and Jesse Owens of Ohio State, America's two fleetest sprinters, in the 50 and 60-meter dashes.

The three European invitees are Henry Nielson, of Denmark, who established a new world record of 8:18.4 for the 3,000 meters during the summer, clipping two seconds from Paavo Nurmi's old mark; Eric Ny, of Sweden, who turned in the best European performances in 1934 at 1,500 meters and 800 meters, 3:50.8 and 1:50.4, respectively, and Luigi Beccali, of Italy, Olympic 1,500-meter champion who held the distance until Bill Bonthron, erstwhile Princeton powerhouse, cracked it with 3.48.8 at the national championships in Milwaukee last June.

Ny and Beccali are expected to match strides with Bonthron, Glenn Cunningham, former Kansas U. ace and holder of the outdoor and indoor mile records and the indoor 1,500-meter figure, and Gene Venzke, of Pennsylvania. Nielson, of Denmark would be entered in races ranging from 3,000 to 10,000 meters against Joe McCluskey, of New York, 3,000-meter indoor steeplechase champion; John Follows, of New York, indoor 5,000-meter champion; Ray Sears, of Butler U.; Frank Crowley, of New York, outdoor 5,000-meter champion, and Harold Mannin, of Wichita, Kans.

The four foreigners probably would be entered in the season's four outstanding undercover meets: Millrose A. A. at Madison Square Garden, February 2; Boston A. A., February 9; New York A. C. at the Garden, February 16, and the American Indoor championships at the Garden, February 23.

Celanese Soccer Team to Play Here

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.). Completion of arrangements for a return game between the Celanese Athletic Association soccer team and the German-American Sports Club, to be played in Washington, D. C., on Thanksgiving Day, November 29, was announced last night by the management of the plant team. The game in the Capital City is scheduled to start at 3 p. m.

Celanese defeated the German-American booters here earlier in the season by the score of 4 to 2.

May Sign Ross.

New York, Nov. 21 (U.P.).—Jimmy Johnston, boxing director of Madison Square Garden will leave for Chicago tomorrow to attempt to sign Barney Ross, lightweight champion, for a bout with the winner of Frday's Tony Falco-Harry Dublinsky ten-round bout here.

Cumberland Schools Split Over Schedule

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 21 (Spl.). Allegany High School and LaSalle Institute reached the parting of their football ways last night with the announcement by Ralph R. Webster, Allegany principal, of the discontinuation of the Thanksgiving Day series between the institution and the scheduling of Penn Avenue High by Allegany for a second contest to be played on the holiday next week at Community Park.

C. U. to Leave Tonight for Pittsburgh

Coach Bergman Planning to Shift Line-up for Duquesne Game.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY'S gridmen will be Pittsburgh bound tonight, headed West for the season's finale on Saturday with Duquesne in the Smoky City. But not before Coach Dutch Bergman gives the boys the once over in a scrimmage with the freshmen.

Not entirely satisfied with the team's work or spirit this week, Bergman last night intimated that a revamped line-up would face the Dukes. Dutch has yet to start the same four back field men in two consecutive games. The line has been rather stabalized, but none of the positions permanent so far as he is concerned.

Saturday, Dranginis may start for Augusterfer at quarter, with Glodeck and Tom Gearty at the halves and either Tom Oliver or Bob Makofske at full. The other ball toters will be used, of course, but sparingly.

Likely to Use Seniors.

Two changes contemplated in the line involve Fleming and Mulligan, Hermie Schmarr and Zeke Brown ends. Bergman said he might start at the flanks, but he couldn't have been serious. The sophs are all right, but those seniors are better, and Mr. Bergman realizes as much.

Catholic has been primed to stop Art Strutt, whose capers have netted 102 points on the gridiron this season and have put him at the top of the individual scoring heap. Strutt and Bill Shepherd, of Western Maryland, are waging a pretty race for the championship.

The Redbirds stopped Shepherd and they believe they will stop Strutt, too. Carnegie Tech bottled him up last week in ekeing out a 3-to-0 victory.

The squad will arrive tomorrow morning in Pittsburgh and will be quartered at Webster Hall, a short distance from Forbes Field, where the game is to be played.

Givens Drives Alexandria Gridmen

Coach Prepares Team for Fredericksburg; Other Teams Active.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 21 (Spl.).—Coach Maurice Givens drove the Alexandria High gridmen today. Several players were absent for one reason or another. Those on hand took part in a hard scrimmage. The scrubs used play that will be probably be employed by the Fredericksburg high eleven Friday when the down-Staters invade for a crack at the District title.

Episcopal High School first and second teams were sent through a long, hard scrimmage by Coach Cardwell at Hoxton Field this afternoon.

Line smashes by Bryant, hard and fast running through the line and around end by Hoxton and Wilson featured the workout.

The team entrains for Orange Friday night, for their annual battle with Woodberry Forest School. Episcopal has the finest record of any Hill Top aggregation in years, and has a chance to tie for the State preparatory title. Staunton Military Academy, the outstanding team in the State, is undefeated and untied, thus far. The locals have been tied by Augusta.

Preparations for Sunday's game with the Washington Federals in Griffith Stadium were made tonight by the Fraters. Coach Nick Colasanto was in charge.

Confidence in both camps was expressed by the Pirates and St. Ritas here tonight. The Saints are challenging the Pirates for the 150-pound championship of the city.

The issue will be settled at Hayden's Field Sunday.

Basketball, on its last legs as a drawing card here, was shoved deeper away from the spotlight, when a ruling was passed permitting the use of the Armory Hall but one night a week for independent teams.

Leaders of independent teams will gather within a fortnight to combat the ruling.

Local enthusiasts are asking for a "New Deal" in regard to the indoor sport, and no doubt steps toward altering the drastic ruling will be taken.

Tilden Defeated.

London, Nov. 21 (U.P.).—Big Bill Tilden, professional tennis ace in the United States, today suffered his first defeat in the Wembley Professional Lawn Tennis Tournament against Hans Nusslein, of Germany. The score was 3—6, 6—1, 5—7, 6—2, 6—4. The tournament closes Friday.

HERE'S THE ANSWER
Balmaccan Type RAINCOAT

There are two kinds of people in rainy weather. Those who can afford to stay indoors and lounge (they should visit our pajama department) and those who can't. For these latter hardy puddle jumpers we recommend these new raincoats of chemically treated fabrics that shed water like a duck's back. Balmaccan model or the double-breasted raglan sleeve style that's exceptionally smart. The checks, plaids and herringbones make them look like stylish topcoats . . . in fact, we know many men who wear them as such.

Stocks Drift Lower Despite Some Gains

Phone Dividend Clears Up Uncertainty; Sales Cut to 805,120 Shares.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Trade winds were too light to stir the stock market out of a rut today and most groups continued to drift.

Utility shares recovered a little from their recent sinking spell, but rails were a drag on the list.

Power issues stiffened in sympathy with a further rally of 9 points in American Telephone & Telegraph after the telephone board had declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.25 a share on the common.

While the regular payment had been expected in most quarters, the usual disbursement of about $42,000,000 to the army of Telephone shareholders dispelled remaining uncertainty and cleared the market atmosphere somewhat.

Buyers Still Cautious.

Buyers, however, continued to pick stocks with caution, sticking mainly to industrials favored by the immediate business outlook or chances for increased dividend payments.

Favorable midweek figures on steel and electric power production evoked no speculative jubilation, as far as could be detected on the ticker tape. They did encourage business obeservers to predict further slow improvement in trade and industry.

Moderate gains were liberally sprinkled through the list at the finish. But the Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks was three-tenths of a point lower, at 72.3. It has held within a range of about a point for more than a week.

Turnover Is Lighter.

Noting the poor action of rail shares lately, traders did most of their early selling in that division of the list. Industrials refused to budge appreciably, despite the heaviness of the carrier issues, and later the market generally stiffened, particularly after announcement of the regular telephone dividend.

American Telephone closed at 106, having recovered nearly 6 points from the low of its recent drop. Consolidated Gas, Public Service of New Jersey, Pacific Lighting and other power stocks showed an inclination to recover, despite the pessimism spread by discussion of Federal plans for power development and fears of further rate-cut agitation.

Power Output Increases.

Reflecting some general business improvement, as well as seasonal gains, the weekly power figures compiled by the Edison Electric Institute registered a substantial increase over the preceding week and made the highest total since early 1931. The increase over 1933 widened to 4.6 per cent from 3.6 the week before.

Leading steel shares sagged in face of a favorable Iron Age review. According to that publication, demand for steel and iron has gathered momentum, lifting the operating rate to 28½ per cent of capacity, from 27 a week ago.

Chrysler, General Motors, General Electric, Montgomery Ward, Santa Fe, New York Central and Westinghouse were on the side of the losers, all showing small declines. American Can, J. I. Case, Du Pont and Borg Warner sold up fractionally.

Hazel Atlas Glass spurted more than 4 points in thin trading. Air Reduction, Eastman Kodak and Liggett & Myers B, set new 1934 high marks. A number of preferred stocks recorded sizable gains as demand for income-producing securities spilled over from high-grade bonds.

Auto Industry Takes About 1-5 Steel Yield

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—The American Iron & Steel Institute reports that the automobile industry took 21 per cent of the output of steel mills in the first ten months of the year. Building and railroad equipment industries, together with container concerns, were the next largest users of finished steel products, the institute reported.

Finance, Business, Economics

Foreign Lending, Recognized as Essential to Advance Trade, Is Found Increasing in England; Handicapped in U. S. by Lack of Confidence.

By Special Writer of The Post.

The National Foreign Trade Convention at its recent annual meeting declared that "Foreign lending is recognized as an essential function to further foreign trade. That some of the loans made during post-war years proved to have been injudicious does not justify exaggeration of probable loss, nor the failure to point to the benefits obtained through the sale of our surplus production and the consequent maintenance of employment." An article in the London Economist of November 3 on "Overseas Lending" likewise emphasizes the necessity of renewing international lending to restore normality to the world's trading and financial relations. "There can not be any doubt," it said, "that the cessation of lending by the industrial countries to the undeveloped areas of the world helped to precipitate the headlong fall of raw material prices, or that the failure of overseas lending to revive has delayed and hindered the gradual recovery of these areas."

So far as the United States is concerned, however, there is no sign of reviving activity in the market for foreign loans. During the first ten months of the present year, the only foreign issues included in the summary of the new capital flotations published by the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, are a $50,000,000 refunding Canadian offering and a short-term issue of $1,200,000, out of total issues (new capital and refunding), amounting to $1,886,455,547. New capital issues floated in Great Britain during the first ten months of the year amounted to £124,092,000. Of this total approximately £34,600,000 were for account of India, Ceylon and other British countries, with £2,902,000 floated for other foreign countries.

Confidence Is Chief Obstacle To Foreign Lending in U. S.

In this country, the chief obstacle to a revival of foreign lending lies in lack of confidence. Although the securities act may hamper the flotation of foreign loans in the future, and the Johnson act prevent flotations for governments in default on war debts, the unreceptive attitude of American investors sufficiently explains the existing stagnation. In Great Britain the investing public is also wary of foreign issues, but the pressure for further relaxation of official restrictions upon new flotations indicates that there would be some expansion of such loans under more favorable conditions.

The position of the United States is quite different from that of Great Britain, of course, since we have a surplus on current international account that is available for lending abroad. Last year that surplus was estimated at $210,000,000, as compared with $131,000,000 in the preceding year and $725,000,000 in 1928. In the absence of any revival of foreign lending the surplus due this country has to be paid for by shipments of gold.

Great Britain has a legitimate excuse for not lending, since she has no surplus. However, the forced withdrawal from the international field of a once great creditor country and the voluntary withdrawal of another great post-war creditor country create serious problems for all the undeveloped countries that are dependent upon a steady supply of foreign capital.

Export Industries Lack Adequate Products Outlet.

The export industries of the United States and Great Britain can not find adequate outlets for their products merely by a lowering of trade barriers and removal of other restrictions. The British are much more dependent upon their foreign markets than the United States, and that no doubt explains their greater eagerness to reenter the foreign loan field. The investor, however, has had a lesson that makes him extremely shy. He will be apt to distrust those borrowing countries dependent upon a steady flow of new loans to meet past obligations and he will want better assurances that borrowing countries will be afforded opportunities to meet their debts by shipping goods to creditor countries. The nationalistic tariff policies of both Great Britain and the United States not only limit foreign trade directly but add to the risks of overseas lending by making repayment of loans more difficult. The result is further contraction of trade and increasing difficulty in reviving investment confidence in foreign issues.

Bond Market Is Unsettled by Rail Pressure

Federals Fairly Steady as Sales Volume Drops to $10,858,000.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Selling pressure on railroad loans unsettled the bond market today, although some improvement occurred in utilities and the Government list was fairly steady. Prime investments were only slightly changed.

Transfers aggregated $10,858,000 par value, against $12,233,000 on Tuesday and of this amount the turnover in Government accounted for $2,030,000 compared with $2,770,000 the day before. The Standard Statistics Co. average of 60 domestic corporate loans declined two-tenths of a point to 83.9, the lowest since October 10.

Selling in the carrier group was of a selective character and brokers were of the opinion that it represented shifting from certain groups to others by large investors.

Missouri Pacific Irregular.

The issues of Missouri Pacific were irregular. The 5s of '77 gaining 1⅝ points to 23, while the 5s of '81 yielded 2½ to 21. Most of the issues of New York Central sold lower, including the debentures 6s which yielded 1⅜ points to 91⅞.

Others losing a point or so included obligations of the St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Colorado & Southern, Illinois Central, Kansas City Southern and Southern Railway. New Haven 3½s, however, were 1½ higher at 33¼.

Utilities, a large number of which had been a drag on the market for several days, were in better demand. Consolidated Gas 5s were ¼ higher, at 101¾; New Orleans Public Service 5s were ½ better, at 54½, and Northern States Power 5s gained ⅝, to 103. Others showing slight improvement included some issues of Public Service Electricity & Gas, Southern Bell Telephone and Utah Light & Traction. New York City tractions were again firm.

Demand Lifts Industrials.

A fairly broad demand lifted a number of industrial bonds one or more points, including Wheeling Steel 5½s, up 2¼, at 99¼; Sharon Steel Hoop 5½s, up 2, at 73, and Goodrich 6s, up 1¼, at 87¼.

All of the Paramount Publix issues were 1 to 3 points higher, following announcement that bankers had developed a reorganization plan.

Home Owners Loan 4s with a gain or 10-32ds, at 100.14, led the Government list toward higher levels.

Curb Trading Is Irregular; Utilities Rise

Specialties Turn Mixed; Sales Rise Slightly to 174,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Divergent trends prevailed in the curb exchange trading today. Utilities accounted for some further recovery. Specialties were mixed. Activity was at a moderate pace.

Prices were fairly steady at the opening. Selling appeared during the second hour, but quotations largely recovered by the early afternoon, with a number of issues continuing to move up for net gains.

Consolidated Gas & Electric of Baltimore and Montreal Light, Heat & Power advanced about a point each. American Gas & Electric and Electric Bond & Share were steady. Alcohols were slightly improved, including Hiram Walker and Distilleries Corporation-Seagrams.

Swift Internacionale and Sherwin-Williams each dipped a point or so. Pioneer Gold, Lake Shore and Aluminum Co. of America eased fractionally. General Tire & Rubber common dropped 1½, but the preferred soared 10 points in a small transfer. Singer Manufacturing regained 4 of the 5 points lost yesterday. The celluloid issues were firm. Armstrong Cork closed a point higher.

Transfers approximated 174,000 shares, compared with 170,000 yesterday.

Wheat Declines Fraction While Corn Climbs

Cotton Prices Decline as General Market Closes 1 Point Up to 4 Off.

Chicago, Nov. 21 (AP).—A jump of nearly 2 cents a bushel in the corn market today accompanied the liveliest shipping demand witnessed here in the last six months.

Predictions of much colder weather were taken as pointing to enlarged feeding demand for corn, and it was intimated that within a week 1,000,000 bushels of corn would be shipped out of Chicago to Eastern distributing ports. The volume of trading today in corn futures was decidedly larger than has recently been the rule.

Corn closed strong at some reaction from the day's top but ⅝-1⅜ above yesterday's finish; May 85⅛ to ¼; wheat unchanged to ¼ lower; May, 97¾ to ⅞; oats, ¼ off to ⅝ up, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 20 cents.

Advances of the corn market were in the face of heavy selling to realize profits for holders. Highest prices of the day were reached shortly before trading ended. Helping to run corn prices up was attention given to persistent smallness of receipts at terminals. Omaha had arrivals of only 3 cars today, Kansas City 24 and Minneapolis 7. The bulk of Chicago receipts came from other terminals, not from rural sources.

Cotton Market

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—There was a fair volume of business in cotton today, but it was largely in the evening-up of December contracts. Orders were so evenly divided that prices moved within a range of four or five points, with the market closing steady net one point higher to four points lower.

The report of the Census Bureau showing 8,832,991 bales ginned prior to November 14, against 11,248,200 last year was in accord with expectations.

Switching from December to later deliveries was active at times with December closing eight points under July, compared with a difference of five points at the close of the previous day.

Exports today 25,200, making 1,751,044 so far this season. Port receipts, 13,149; United States port stocks, 3,162,908.

Daily Stock Trends

Farm Products Gains Become Less General

Cattle Markets Follow Irregular Trends; Feeds Advance.

U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Economics.

Price gains among staple farm products became less general around the middle of the month, but market values were mostly holding well. Features were the further sharp rise of corn, the prevailing strength of the grain and feed markets and new top levels for hogs. Corn and oats are selling at double the lowest prices of the year. Feeds also advanced with the increasing demand at this season.

Cattle markets followed irregular trends. Sheep and lambs sold fairly close to the comparatively steady levels prevailing for many weeks past. Cotton and wool sold fairly steady. Hides slightly lower—calfskins unchanged.

Butter and cheese show hesitation following recent gains. Some lines of eggs advanced while others declined, but general position continued favorable. Turkey markets were active with moderate supply, good quality and firm prices above the level of last year.

Fruits and vegetables showed irregular price movement, without many sharp changes. November potato and sweet potato markets have strengthened a little. Most recent changes have been upward for onions, celery, apples, oranges, and cranberries.

Cotton Fairly Steady.

Prices of spot cotton have changed but little so far this month. Sustaining influences were the prices of most other commodities, the continued high rate of domestic mill activity, increased mill takings, firm gray cloth prices, and the continuation of the holding movement.

Unfavorable conditions included the continued inactivity in spot cotton markets, some decline in the volume of sales in wholesale cloth markets, and small exports, also the uncertainty regarding cotton acreage plans of cooperating producers for the 1935 crop. Forwardings to domestic mills increased sharply.

Inquiries for American cotton for export continued few.

Mixed Trend for Livestock.

Declines were enforced on most classes and grades of cattle, but by virtue of scarcity choice grain-fed steers and yearlings were immune to market pressure and steers selling in the lowest price registers of the market escaped material loss. Chicago top on light steers was $9.50 per 100 pounds. The bulk of the beef cow sold on a $2.50 to $3.50 basis. Marketings of stockers and feeders were light. The general run of native and Western stocker and feeder steers sold at $2.75 to $4.25.

Hog prices were strongly sustained, in the face of a none-too-healthy fresh pork trade, and new top prices were quoted at Chicago. With lard and provision markets continuing on the upturn, killers apparently bought hogs with an eye to the future.

The fat lamb trade sagged, the buying side applying pressure as dressed markets slipped and as the approaching poultry season gave promise of further curtailing lamb consumption.

Walt Mason Himself

Back to the Soil.

When prospects are alarming, it's strange how people say, "Get back, get back to farming, it is the only way. If trouble round you thickens, and there's no rest or peace, get back to growing chickens and standard brands of geese. Your troubles will be over when to the farm you go, and raise two tons of clover where one ton used to grow. There you can raise the fodder, the predigested oats, which make you stronger, broader, and feel like billygoats. There you can cure the bacon which has a luscious smell, and which, when promptly taken, will make you hale and well. There'll be no hungry legions, without a cent in hand, when to the rural regions men go and take up land. Their feet are sore with bunions from hunting after jobs; they might be raising squabs." Our problems we'll be solving when we shall wield a plow, or keep a churn revolving, or feed a Berkshire sow. Depressions will not matter when we can stand around, and watch our pigs grow fatter increasing pound by pound. But farmers who've been farming for 50 years or more don't seem to find it charming, in fact, they all look sore. They're wise to all the wrinkles that agriculture knows, and yet their eyes don't twinkle, no mirth within them glows. They saw that their condition goes down and ever down; it is their one ambition to own a shack in town.

Clothing, Books Of Slain Child Found by Grave

Fingerprint Experts Scan Articles for Clews; Suspect Freed.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 21 (AP).—A pink lunch box and a half-pint milk bottle, discovered today buried near where the body of 6-year-old Dorothy Ann Distelhurst was found last week were being scrutinized by a fingerprint expert tonight in the hope of finding a clew to the slayer of the child.

Meanwhile District Attorney General J. Carlton Loser said two men were picked up for questioning in connection with the case today, but one had already been released and the other "probably will be set free Thursday morning."

The one still held was described as a former convict.

The lunch box and milk bottle were found along with books and articles of clothing that Dorothy Ann wore, buried about 2 feet underground within 20 feet of the spot where her body was discovered.

The 6-year-old child disappeared September 19 while walking home from kindergarten, and her body was discovered November 13 by two workmen who were digging flower beds on the grounds of the Davidson County Tuberculosis Hospital. The body was unclothed and the face nearly destroyed by acid.

W. B. Ridge, a city foreman, and W. J. Brazil, digging in the vicinity of the child's grave in hopes of finding some clew, discovered her effects.

"We stuck a stick in the soft earth," they said, "and struck the lunch box." Further digging showed that about a foot from the surface had been buried the box, two books, two shoes, a blue and white plaid dress, two black sox with red stripes around the tops, a half-pint milk bottle and a drinking glass. The latter two articles, loose in the pit, ordinarily were carried inside the lunch box.

Two Priests Slain By Cannibal Tribe

Missionaries Die at Hands of Ferocious Chavantes.

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 21 (AP).—The deaths of two Salesian friars at the hands of the cannibal tribe of Chavante Indians was confirmed yesterday in dispatches from Belem.

Fathers Joao and Pedro were slain on the banks of Death River near Barreira de Santo Izidro. They had been working in the region as missionaries for five years.

The Chavantes are feared by all explorers entering the region between the Xingu and Araguaya Rivers. It was there that Lieut. Col. P. H. Fawcett, famous British explorer, disappeared in May, 1925.

Lady Margaret Stewart To Wed Flying Teacher

London, Nov. 21 (AP).—Notice was given in the London register office yesterday of the forthcoming marriage of Lady Margaret Stewart to her flying instructor, Alan Muntz.

Lady Margaret's father is the Marquess of Londonderry, British minister of aviation. The marriage was understood to be in opposition to his wishes.

Beatrice Aitchison Becomes Aid in Post Toy Fund Drive

Canine Pets Send Gifts to Help Poor Children Enjoy Christmas.

Washington Post Toy Fund. Previously contributed ...	$2.35
Peachy, Cookie and Topsy in memory of "Judy" ..	1.00
Total	$3.35

Miss Beatrice Aitchison, daughter of Interstate Commerce Commissioner and Mrs. Clyde B. Aitchison, turned her attention from higher mathematics yesterday to become a Santa Claus aid in the ranks of those working to put The Washington Post 1934 Toy Fund over the top.

Miss Aitchison will serve as a volunteer in the headquarters of The Post Toy Fund and has agreed to bring as mascot her Murphy Fox Terrier Aitchison, one of the notable contributors to the Pets' Corner of The Junior Post.

Another early volunteer to the Toy Fund Cause yesterday was Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon, pet of Mr. Justice Peyton Gordon of the District Supreme Court. Sandy matched the gift of Laird Kiltie, of Tweburn, with a shining 25-cent piece and agreed to serve as host on some occasions in the Post Fund Toy Shop when it is opened to receive gifts.

Bull Terriers Send Dollar.

Three little Boston Bull Terriers, who live at 2708 Thirty-sixth street northwest" who love children," according to their proud owner, paused in their play yesterday to send $1 to the Post Toy Fund in memory of their playmate "Judy." These two gifts yesterday was a fine start in what is always a touching and notable feature of the Post Toy Funds, the gifts in the names of and in memory of pets.

From Mark Hardin came a gift of toys, and the first fruits of the efforts of the Veterans' Lodge No. 17, American Federation of Government Employees came in a big pile of toys which will be on exhibition at their meeting in the Ambassador Hotel tomorrow night at 8 p. m., when it is hoped members attending will add more toys to this growing evidence of the interest of Uncle Sam's workers in the Toy Fund.

Best of all, Mr. Donald W. Toulouse, vice president of the lodge, promised to establish a toy fund receiving station in the Veterans' Administration Building, where the thousands of empolyes may leave donations of toys. In this way it is assured that many hundreds of toys will be received from this group of Government employes and the directors of the Post Toy Fund expressed the hope yesterday that other Government units would follow suit.

The Post is accumulating pathetic evidence that the needy children of the city are depending on the Post Toy Fund to aid Santa Claus this year. Many of the letters are mere scrawls written in the simple faith of childhood. These young aspirants are not afraid that the Post Toy Fund will fail to go over the top. They have an enduring belief in the goodness of the world, especially at Christmas time.

Headquarters Planned.

The Washington Post Toy Fund will receive donations of gifts, toys and money at The Washington Post Building. All money gifts will be asknowledged in the columns of The Washington Post.

In a few days a headquarters for The Post Toy Fund will be opened in a central location, announcement of the address to be made later in The Washington Post.

It is hoped that the fund will pass the first $100 mark not later than Thanksgiving eve and that the people of the city will choose this method of registering their thanks for the comparative freedom of the city from the worst effects of the depression, as compared to other cities.

Gov. Horner Wins Sales Tax Battle

Legislature Passes Measure for Illinois Levy.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 21 (AP).—Both houses of the Illinois Legislature today passed Gov. Horner's bills for a permanent sales tax at the fourth special session.

Passage in the House followed the Senate's 30-to-13 vote for Horner's plan to strike from the retail sales tax law the provision it should expire next June 30.

The Democratic majority in the House overrode the opposition of about 40 Republican representatives, mostly from downstate, who agreed at a formal caucus to make a party issue of the sales tax. The vote was, 80 to 49.

Victory for the administration came on the earliest possible schedule, passage on third reading being obtained on the third day of the special session.

Final adjournment for the Fifty-eighth General Assembly will be possible Friday, sending the sales tax extension measure to the Governor for his signature.

Blinded in Heavy Rain, Four Killed at Crossing
